FARMERS WAGING DYNAMITE WAR

Sinister Reports are Afloat as Result of Tragedy near Hinchinbrooke.

The drowning of George Hudson and the the flooding of lands as a result of the dynamiting of the dam near Hinchinbrooke, has caused the biggest sensation the county has had in years.
and a survey of the district presents a far more serious state of affairs than was realized at the time of the accident.

It is estimated that between fifteen and twenty thousand acres of most fertile soil has been rendered useless,
as a result of the breaking of the dam,
and this area extends through three townships, Camden, Portland and Hinchinbrooke.

The flooding of the lands has resulted in a lively fight between the farmers of the district and the Napanee River Improvement Company, owners of the dam. Both sides of the story have just been made known. B. S.
O'Loughlin, secretary of the company,
has made his first statement about the affair.

His attitude is that the people who are fighting the drowning of the lands are working on something to which they have no real or legal right. He states that the owners of the land under contention will not take legal means to oust the company, because they are looking for something they did not buy. Hence, other than lawful means have been resorted to.

The position of the Napanee River Improvement Company, he explained, was this: The company was incorporated in 1866.

A list of the lands which would be affected was given to the crown and the right to flood was reserved in all subsequent sales.

About 1867 the Rathbun Company bought out Cook and Cochrane, and subsequently acquired large areas of land which it began selling, and is still selling, at from 50c to $1.00 an acre, reserving the right to flood.

This right the Napanee River Improvement Company has leased from the Rathbun Company, and pays a yearly rental for it.

Consequently, nearly all the land in Hinchinbrooke is held under these rights. That land contiguous to the lake is very rough and rocky and the shores are very high. Many bays are nooded when the dams are full. These are the lands under contention.

The farmers have another story to tell and in it one hears no mention of rights to flood reserved land at 50 cents per acre. There is only a loud complaint against the company which keeps the lands flooded at the time of year when they are most needed. The farmers also blame the government.

The farmers seem to think that justice in the matter is impossible and a determined and secret campaign is being conducted against those whom they hold in blame for the state of complaint against the company which keeps the lands flooded at the time of year when they are most needed. The farmers also blame the government.

The farmers seem to think that justice in the matter is impossible and a determined and secret campaign is being conducted against those whom they hold in blame for the state of their land. The dam was blown up with dynamith three years ago, and altho a great many arrests were made and a long investigation conducted, the "job" had been so well and secretly managed that no trace of the dynamithers was found. The explosion of the dam last week has apparently been carried out with even greater secrecy some deliberation and some careful precautions to cover up tracks.

The watchman left the dam three weeks before the explosion and the day after he left his house was burned.

This condition not only floods the land, but also causes washouts on the roads, and in some places the roads are submerged for periods of the year so as to be impassable and cause the mail routes to be changed. The chain of lakes is about 30 miles long, and is a source of annoyance to farmers all along. From Bellrock to Moscow, the road is drowned now so that the mail has to be delivered by circuitous routes. At this place several horses have been drowned attempting to ford.

The first suit arising out of the dynamiting of the dam at Hinchin-brooke has been entered. The mother of George Hudson, who was drowned, is seeking an unstated amount from the Napanee River Improvement Com-pany.

Another consignment of books at the library, among them the latest fiction which always gets into circulation as soon as catalogued. There are also a number of useful books which as a rule are passed over by the general reader, but upon examination will be found to be not only reliable but very instructive. For the benefit of the members we give a short synopsis of a few which it would be well to cut out and preserve:—

A BOOK OF HOUSE PLANS—
This is the season of the year when new houses are being built and old ones altered and how often are we puzzled how to proceed? Consult the book and the task will be much easier.

OUR VANISHING WILD LIFE—
This book is a practical treatise on the extermination and preservation of wild life, a protest against slaughter and a call to arms in defense of the wild animals.

LEADING AMERICAN INVEN-TORS—The reader learns how every one of these great inventors came to victory as much through invincible courage as by dint of extraordinary talents.

THE LAST FRONTIER—An interesting book upon the strange life of the semi-civilized tribes of Africa.
Well written and profusely illustrated.

500 WAYS TO HELP YOUR CHURCH—How often are the church-workers puzzled to devise some new form of entertainment to help pay the running expenses of the church or to quicken the life of the church in all its departments? Don't worry over the question but get this book and read it.

HAND-WORK IN THE SUNDAY SCHOOL—is a companion book to the above and points the way to guiding the child in the acquisition of knowledge. All up-to-date Sunday School workers will receive great assistance from a perusal of this volume.

REASONABLE BIBLICAL CRIT-ICISM—by Will J. Beecher, D. D., the aim of the author is to make the study of the Bible a live study. A good book but not a goody-goody book.

SHACKLETON IN THE ANT-ARCTIC—the story of the British Antarctic expedition.

AN EXPENSIVE EXPERIMENT—
a critical study of the Hydro-Electric Power Commission of Ontario by an American expert.

IN BEAVER WORLD—by one who has studied the habits of this wonderful animal for twenty-six years. As the beaver is associated with our national emblem and was the lodestone which led to the development of Canada we should know more about him than we do. It is interesting reading and is illustrated by photographs by the author.

THE WEST IN THE EAST—by one who spent ten years in the Orient.
It touches upon the every day life
as well as some of the more serious problems of the eastern nations.

COMMON DISEASES—by Dr.
Woods Hutchinson, deals with such wide-spread discomforts as dyspepsia, catarrh, baldness, worry, deafness, old age, etc., all written in his familiar breezy style.

ENGLAND AND THE ENGLISH—
from a American point of view. The author treats of first impressions;
Who are the English? English Home Life, sport, society, etc. A perusal of this book will be found very interesting.

YOUTH—by Joseph Conard. This author has been some time in finding an audience but now he is coming to his own and this story will make him more popular still.

CANNOT FIND MEN.

Radicals in Germany Laugh at New Army Proposals.

BERLIN, April 29.—A blow was struck at the foundation of the new German military bills providing for an immense increase in the army, when representatives of the Clerical, Radical and Socialist parties yesterday, during the debate on the first reading before the budget committee, expressed doubt as to whether the necessary number of able-bodied recruits could be obtained in Germany.

Mathias Erzberger, the leader of the Clerical centre, who will be one of those to draw up the committee's reports on the bill, said that on the basis of the recruiting statistics of Germany for 1911, no fewer than 43,000 men would be lacking to make up the number required.

The representative of the Radical party questioned whether such enormous armies could be successfully handled, saying that his doubts were shared by many military men.

The Minister of War, Gen. Josiah von Heeringen, denied strenuously that there was any difficulty in obtaining the full number of recruits. He admitted the extraordinary increase of difficulties in leading such armies as that of Germany, as had been shown during the grand manoeuvres, and he said that the methods of training the commanding generals would have to be altered.

An attempt was made at the opening of the sitting to fix on a combined order of discussion for the military and financial measures involving their passage by the same majorities, and thereby preventing a hostile combination between the Socialists and other parties on the financial bill, but this effort was not successful.

FIVE WILL TESTIFY.

Mr. Proudfoot's Witnesses Are Called For Investigation.

TORONTO, April 29.—Before the special committee on privileges and elections in the Parliament Buildings to-day the charges of Wm. Proudfoot against the integrity of Hon. W. J. Hanna and Sir James Whitney will be given the first airing. The intention of the committee is to give the matter all the consideration necessary and to provide all the papers and information desired, but an effort will be made to have the whole matter cleared up by the time the House reassembles.

Hon. Wallace Nesbitt and W. M. Ferguson will conduct the case for the committee, and Messrs. Hartley Dewart and W. K. Cowan for Mr. Proudfoot. The names of those called for the first sitting are as follows: Deputy Attorney-General Cartwright; L. E. C. Thorne, Geo. C. Taylor, W. W. Dunlop of the Provincial Secretary's Department, and Assistant Provincial Secretary S. A. Armstrong.

Mr. Proudfoot in the buildings late yesterday afternoon stated that the case was practically prepared and that with the exception of a few papers which could not be found cross-examination would begin at once.

The committee sits at ten o'clock in the private bills room, and it is thought may hold three sessions per day.

MONTREAL, April 29.—Montreal was shaken by an earthquake at 7.30 o'clock last evening. The shock was particularly severe in the northern and western sections of the city and Westmount, where houses swayed and furniture rattled for several minutes, though no further damage than the cracking of a ceiling in the residence of Sir Thomas Shaughnessy is reported.

The shock was recorded on a small seismograph that was installed some months ago to record disturbances occasioned by blasting in connection with the C.N.R. tunnel operations under Mount Royal.

Tunnel engineers are making a survey of the tunnel works, but up to a late hour last night no damage was reported.

The seismograph in the McGill University has been out of commission some time.

BROCKVILLE, April 29.—Shortly after 7 p.m. a perceptible earthquake shock was felt in Brockville last even- ing. In the centre portion of the town the quake was more pronounced, last- ing fully ten seconds. Buildings were shaken to the extent of cracking dishes and other articles. Reports re- ceived here would indicate that it followed the line of the river east and west of Brockville.

SYRACUSE, N.Y., April 29.—Earth- quake shocks were felt in several vil- lages in northern New York at 7.30 last evening, causing considerable alarm. At Canton, St. Lawrence coun- ty, the shocks continued for a minute. Houses were jarred and dishes rat- tled on the shelves, but no damage was done.

Shook Buildings In Ogdensburg.

OGDENSBURG, N.Y., April 29.—The heaviest earthquake ever experi- enced in Ogdensburg occurred at 7.30 last evening. It lasted fully half a minute and was followed by a loud rumbling sound.

Buildings throughout the city shook so badly that the people ran into the streets in fear that they would col- lapse.

The shock was distinctly felt in many towns of Franklin and St. Law- rence counties.

TORONTO, April 29.—A number of prominent Toronto physicians, com- menting upon the report issued yes- terday on Dr. F. F. Friedmann's pa- tients in this city, stated that in their opinion the indications were very bright for the ultimate recovery of these patients.

One of these physicians, who is car- ing for a number of patients inocu- lated by Dr. Friedmann, says that he is becoming very optimistic as to the results of his patients, and that after several weeks of watching he could now state that his patients are actu- ally showing signs of pulling them- selves together for a renewal vitality.

Politeness Paid.

A striking example of the value of politeness is told by a woman who was left to support herself and her child and who had never had any business training. Her husband had had an income of several thousand dollars a year, but it had all been spent on good living. After his death the wife applied for employment to a firm with which she had had an ac- count.

"What can you do?" she was asked.

Partly in jest she replied she could write a polite note. To her surprise she was taken at her word, for the firm was badly in need of such a per- son. She was told that it was difficult to find some one who could answer complaints in such a way that the friendship of the customer was retain- ed. For several years she supported herself and her child by writing polite notes.—Detroit Free Press.

Smoking In Winter.

A physician writing to the Family Doctor (London) says that smoking has a worse effect on most people in win- ter than in summer, and he advises all smokers who find their health and mental faculties impaired in winter for no apparent reason to accept tobacco as the explanation and to cut down their smoking during the colder months. Tobacco, he says, is a power- ful drug and cannot be consumed in large quantities without producing a certain effect on the heart. It must be remembered that during the winter the heart has a great deal more work to do than in summer, for the cold causes the blood vessels to become small and pinched. It is thus less able to bear the extra strain put upon it by smok- ing.

Almanacs.

Almanacs were not allowed in the hands of the common people of Rome until about 800 B. C. Until that time all knowledge of the calendar was en- tirely in the custody of the priests. Did one wish to know the date of a feast day, the hours of the sun's rising or setting or when there would be a new moon he must consult the priest, as these occult laws were only to be re- vealed by him. But one day a pre- sumptuous layman named Flavius, sec- retary of Appius Claudius, obtained the secret either by stealthily obtaining ac- cess to the documents or by repeatedly consulting the priests. He engraved his records on white tablets and exhibited them openly in the forum and so be- came the publisher of the first almanac. —Harper's.

The body contains phosphorus sufficient to make 483,000 matches. Phosphorus is one of fourteen elements composing the body—divided among bones, flesh, nervous system and other organs. The perfect health of body requires a perfect balance of the elements. These elements come from the food we eat—the stomach extracts and distributes them.

But if stomach is deranged—the balance of health is destroyed and the blood does not carry the proper elements to the different organs, and there is blood trouble—nerve trouble—heart trouble. ANIMALS THAT COUNT.

Horses and Oxen Will Keep a Record of Their Daily Trips.

Nearly everyone has seen trained animals that "count," or at least give the impression that they can count. Most of this is performed by means of signals the trainer makes which are understood by the animals. The gesture of a hand, the tone of voice, the stamping of the foot, and various other signals will enable a horse or other animal to pick out the number wanted, or stop "counting" at a given number, the counting being done by taps of the hoof.

But there are untrained animals that can count, and not up to the ordinary six or twenty numbers that about limit their ability in shows. Rather, they can count to thirty or a hundred.

In some of the mines of Hainault horses are used to haul loads of ore over a little roadway and back by another route, as the tunnels are narrow. Thirty such trips constitute a day's work for the horse, and without a word from drivers these horses will start for the great incline that leads to their stable at the end of the thirtieth trip. In fact, many of the drivers do not keep account of the trips at all, knowing the horses will do so, and when at the end of the thirtieth trip the horses wheel suddenly and make for the outlet, these drivers have to jump and hold them long enough to loosen the catches that hold the tugs to the little cars.

But even this is beaten by oxen. "The stupid ox" has become a well-known phrase the world over, and yet, according to Montaigne, the oxen employed in the royal gardens of Susa to turn the wheels to which water-pails are attached absolutely refused to do more than one hundred rounds, as that was their day's work.

This work consisted of having the oxen travel in a circle, keeping the water-drawing wheel in motion, and without fail on the hundredth trip around the circle the oxen would stop. Nor could they be urged to make another round.

It is said that wild apes can count to four, and in order to hunt them at least five hunters go out and four leave the place in a manner that will attract the apes. After the fourth hunter has gone the apes will come out, and are thus secured, but they will never go out from their cover until four hunters have been seen leaving the place. The same is also claimed by naturalists of rooks and magpies.

Origin of Knives.

The first knives, according to the conclusions of a scientist who has made a study of the subject, were fractured stones that happened to have a sharp cutting edge. But the vegetable kingdom also furnishes very keen cutting edges in the leaves and stalks of certain plants, which might have been availed of before artificial knives were made. The fractured stone knife easily suggested the shaping of flaked stones, like flint, into the form of blades. Among the Seri Indians on Tiburon island, in the gulf of California, the primitive custom of utilizing fractured and water worn stones for knives still exists.

OUR OTTAWA LETTER

Ottawa, April 29—With the passing of the closure resolutions on the evening of April 23rd, has opened a new era of Parliamentary life in Canada; an era the result of which upon the nation's history can only be judged by the course of events. Closure was carried by a solid Government vote—as would be the case in every proposition fathered by Mr. Borden and Mr. Rogers, but its full meaning is impossible to determine so involved is its phraseology. This was shown by the many differences of opinion during the debate, and the fact that the Premier was willing to put in an amendment before the scheme he and his followers had arranged made it impossible.

Further, Mr. Borden in his anxiety to get this unpleasant gag business over, offered to call an extra session of Parliament in September when the new rules could be considered in a constitutional manner, by committees presided over by the Speaker. The obvious inference was that the new rules had been hastily put together to enable the Government to dragoon Parliament on the Naval Bill and any other measure upon which they desired to stifle opposition, and also to acquire power by which they could by Conservative members of Parliament and the Conservative Press throughout Canada to make it appear that rule 17, under which the Government so insultingly deprived the Leader of the opposition of his opportunity to speak or move an amendment to the closure resolution, had been put in the rules by Sir Wilfrid Laurier himself. The records show that Rule 17 was adopted when the original rules of the House were formulated after Confederation, and that it was continued in existence since then. But during 46 years neither Liberals nor Conservatives have availed themselves of it. It remained for Mr. Borden under the influence of Hon. Mr. Rogers to discover and enforce this rule in a manner never intended by its framers.

That the rule was enforced in an improper manner by shutting off Sir Wilfrid Laurier after he had been "recognized" by the Speaker is shown by Bonrinot, the standard authority of Parliamentary practice, who says on this very point—"It is irregular to interfere with the Speaker's call in favour of any other member."

CODERRE STILL SILENT.

Since March 17th Hon. Louis Coderre the Nationalist who inherited the Cabinet seat which his erstwhile Nationalist Leader, Hon. F. D. Monk, found he could no longer occupy with obvious inference was that the new rules had been hastily put together to enable the Government to dragoon Parliament on the Naval Bill and any other measure upon which they desired to stifle opposition, and also to acquire power by which they could drive the estimates through Parliament in bulk and prevent the airing of scandals.

So far as rules can accomplish this, they have succeeded; but no rules can be devised capable of preventing an active and able Opposition from bringing to the notice of Parliament and the people those matters which demand such publicity. The manner in which the Liberal Leaders have succeeded in loosening the gag during the past week gives reason to hope that they will be able to prevent that stringent closure which is evidently designed by the Ministers who are leading the Prime Minister.

NATIONALISTS FOR CLOSURE.

It was a notable feature that the Nationalists in the House to a man voted with the Government. Elected on solemn pledges to force an appeal to the people before any naval aid should be given, they voted with the Government to stifle discussion in Parliament in order to force upon the people a participation in Imperial defence which is not in accord with their ambitions. The result is that these recreant representatives have put Mr. Borden in a position to force through Parliament with a majority of 35, a measure opposed by a popular majority of 200,000 Canadian voters.

The close of the debate was marked by much brilliant oratory. A particularly weak defence was essayed by Hon. Mr. Borden, backed by one of the most remarkable ebullitions of egotism in Parliamentary history from Sir Edmund Osler, who undertook to discipline Parliament and declared that in his 17 years connection with it he had not heard a dozen speeches worth listening to. One reason, though not one mentioned by Sir Edmund, being that he is very seldom in the House.

AN EXCITING CONCLUSION.

The final scenes were full of interest. The debate was concluded by Dr. Clark, under whose vigorous onslaught the Premier and Hon. W. T. White were ill at ease. Hon. Mr. Rogers was prudently absent. The galleries were crowded and the House itself was unusually full, while suppressed excitement was in the air. An even more remarkable evidence of the Government's perturbation was that a gang of plain clothes men and detectives had been posted around the Chamber, while at the actual vote taking, the Assistant Deputy Sergeant occupied his seat and Deputy Sergeant Bowie was posted beside the Sergeant's chair awaiting orders in case of disturbance. It was reminiscent of the days of Charles I, when that monarch came with his soldiers to arrest the five members—a move which eventually cost him his head.

There was no disturbance. Two votes were taken. First on Mr. Hazen's gag motion to put the closure, and then the closure itself. Only a few cries of "shame" greeted the Nationalist members as they voted to swallow their convictions, if they had any. In each case the vote stood 108-73—a Government majority of 35. When the House adjourned, the tempest broke. Mr. Borden escaped, but his followers raised feeble cheers in honour of their first taste of the application of brute force to crush opposition. They were speedily answered by the Liberals, who rallied round Sir Wilfrid Laurier and cheered him to the echo.

SEEKING VAIN EXCUSES.

Deliberate attempts have been made

CODERRE STILL SILENT.

Since March 17th Hon. Louis Coderre the Nationalist who inherited the Cabinet seat which his erstwhile Nationalist Leader, Hon. F. D. Monk, found he could no longer occupy with honour, has lain under the charge of conniving at systematic personation in his Ministerial bye-election for Hochelaga. For nearly six weeks he has been content to denounce his accusers as double criminals, perjurers and blackmailers. For nearly six weeks he has done nothing to vindicate his own honour or punish those he brands as criminals although repeatedly challenged to do so. Is it that he fears investigation?

A GOVERNMENT OF RESTRICTION.

Dr. Michael Clark, summing up the closure debate on Wednesday night:

"Look on this picture and on that, and you will know how to vote when your next chance to vote comes. The election cannot be postponed forever. There never was a time when the distinction was so clear in this country between Toryism and Liberalism as it is at the present time. My right hon. friend the leader of the Government and his Government were elected up a policy of restriction, the restriction of the markets of the farmers. They have remained in power upon a policy of restriction, the restriction of the proper development of Canada as a nation within the Empire. Elected upon restriction of trade, remaining to restrict development in Canada, they propose to establish both policies by the restriction of free speech. We stand for freedom on every count of the indictment; and we have not the shadow of a doubt that the people of Canada stand with us."

UNENVIALE QUARTETTE.

When the present Government is forced to the people, four names will be remembered with condemnation from one end of the Dominion to the other. They are W. B. Northrup, of East Hastings, and Richard Blain, of Peel, who moved the resolution on April 9th which applied the gag to Sir Wilfrid Laurier; Hon. J. D. Hazen, St. John, and Hon. Frank Cochrane, of Nipissing, who immediately afterwards moved the resolution which took away from the oldest Parliamentarian and ablest statesman in Canada, the right to offer any amendment to the iniquitous and ill-devised closure resolution.

A Moralizing Burglar.

From continental Europe comes the story of a burglar who left the following note pinned to the pillow in a mansion he had ransacked: "In the Bible it says, 'Lead us not into temptation.' You and your show of wealth tempted me, and I fell, though 'an honest workman.' Therefore you are the sinner, not I. Repent before it is too late."

Fake Curios.

Dr. Wakeling, the Egyptologist, tells us that it is useless to warn the tourist against the fake curio. He buys and is sold with an unfailing regularity, and hardly any imitation is too gross to deceive him. Dr. Wakeling tells us of a lady who bought a scarab from a boy who assured her that he had himself stolen it from the excavations in the temple of Akaton. And she displayed her treasure triumphantly and always with the words, "And I am sure it must be true, for he had such an honest little face."—Argonaut.

To "ask quarter" was to fourth of the soldier's pay and to refuse quarter, of to decline to accept that.

DURING the panic of four years ago Mrs. Bowser lost the sum of $2.80 that she had in a bank. Since that time every time that Mr. Bowser has happened to come home a bit early or late she has held her breath for fear he would announce that the bank in which she has $3.20 on deposit had gone up the spout. He was home an hour ahead of time er-in-law up the state today. He went into the manufacture of peach brandy three years ago and has sent me a sample of his oldest. You are posted on wines and such, and I wish you'd tell me what you think of it."

"It must be ordinary stuff if made in this country," observed Mr. Bowser as he toyed with the cork. "We have the peaches, but we don't seem to know how to use them. I'll taste it, however."

He lifted the jug and took a swallow and then stood for a minute smacking his lips. That peach brandy was not so ordinary as he had looked for.

"Is it pretty fair?" asked the butcher.

"I should say," replied Mr. Bowser as he took a long swig and looked very wise over it. "That is at least XX stuff. Your brother-in-law has done very well—very well indeed. With a few more years experience"—

He took another drink, looked wiser than before and continued:

"With a few more years' experience he can almost hope to compete with the French in the manufacture. Ah—um!"

"I'd like to send him back a pretty good report," said the butcher. "Would you mind tasting again?"

The Brandy Is All Right.

"Not at all. Ha! I find the slickness of it fully equal to the best French brandy, though it may lack a trifle in body. You can tell your brother-in-law that the slickness is all right. A gallon of it would slip down a man's throat while he was winking his eyes."

"Thanks, sir. My brother-in-law will be highly pleased. Won't you taste again and see if the body isn't up to time? Let it linger on your tongue a little longer."

Mr. Bowser lifted the jug for the fourth time, and the gurgle in his throat had the sound of a brook running away. When he finally choked off he sighed and wiped off his mouth and said:

"The body is all right. You can write to your brother-in-law that this is at least XXXX peach brandy and that no Frenchman has ever made better. He has only got to keep right on to make himself famous. Tell him that Mr. Bowser says so."

"I will, sir, and thanks to you again. You will probably receive a jug of it yourself next week."

When Mr. Bowser got his beefsteak under his arm and started for home he felt soft and oily and good natured. A street car passed, and he nodded and smiled at the motorman. A grocer's boy came along with a basket of potatoes, and he was patted on the back and told to keep right on if he wanted to be president of the United States. Mr. Bowser entered by the basement door and called the cook "old girl" as he handed her the steak. He was laughing as he went up to the sitting room, and after a long look at him Mrs. Bowser asked:

"Well, did you meet with a funny adventure while getting your meat?"

HeLaughs at Home.

"I did. Ha, ha, ha," he laughed. "Say, what is the blamed old owl of a cat looking at?"

Consider Well This Advice.

No woman suffering from any form of female troubles should lose hope until she has given Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound a fair trial.

This famous remedy, the medicinal ingredients of which are derived from native roots and herbs, has for nearly forty years proved to be a most valuable tonic and invigorator of the female organism. Women residing in almost every city and town in the United States bear willing testimony to the wonderful virtue of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

If you have the slightest doubt that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound will help you, write to Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co. (confidential) Lynn, Mass., for advice. Your letter will be opened, read and answered by a woman, and held in strict confidence.

"Yesh, help me upstairs, 'cause I won't live long. I'd like to live a hundred years, Mrs. Bowser, but that old cat won't let me. Call me hubby and say you love me!"

There was a procession down the hall. It was composed of Connoisseur Bowser, his indignant wife and the wondering cat, and their progress was slow and eccentric. The procession had difficulty in getting upstairs, as Mr. Bowser halted on every step to weep, but it was finally accomplished, and two minutes later he fell forward upon his bed and whispered as he closed his eyes:

bank. Since that time every time that Mr. Bowser has happened to come home a bit early or late she has held her breath for fear he would announce that the bank in which she has $3.20 on deposit had gone up the spout.

He was home an hour ahead of time the other afternoon, and as he entered the house she cried out:

"Don't tell me! I can't bear it!"

"Tell you what?"

"That the Double Security, Fidelity and You-Can't-Lose-a-Cent-Here bank has busted."

"I guess the bank is all right. There was an old woman scrubbing the steps as I came along, and she didn't seem at all excited."

"Thank heaven for that! But what brought you home so early?"

"The beef trust."

"But how?"

"They are going to raise prices again, and I have come home to write out a warning in behalf of the American people. The dead line has been reached at last. Another rise and the people will cry for blood."

"The people are always crying for something, but they never do anything."

"They will now, with Bowser to lead them."

When the Bowsters sat down to dinner there was a fine steak staring them in the face, and Mrs. Bowser looked for words of approbation. After it had been tested the enemy of the beef trust said:

"I don't say this isn't a fair steak—a fair to medium steak, such as one can buy anywhere, but I'm concetled enough to think I can select a better."

After the Butcher.

"The butcher said it was his best," replied Mrs. Bowser.

"Then he lied, and I will go over and tell him so! I've got to have a row with him about so often to keep him halfway honest."

"I shouldn't go over and raise a fuss. We have very little to complain of."

"But he needs some plain talk."

Ten minutes later he entered the butcher shop with blood in his eye, but before he could explode he caught sight of a gallon jug tagged with the butcher's name, and the man of meat explained:

"I just got that jug from my broth-

He Laughs at Home.

"I did. Ha, ha, ha!" he laughed. "Say, what is the blamed old owl of a cat looking at?"

"At you, probably. She hasn't heard you laugh like that for six months. What was the fun?"

"Why, I—ha, ha, ha! It was just too rich for anything. I can't talk of it without almost choking. By George, but I wish you had been there!"

"But what was it?" persisted Mrs. Bowser.

"It was in Chicago ten years ago—ha, ha, ha! I was going along State street just behind an old rooster when all of a sudden he—ha, ha, ha! Say, I can't tell it! It's too funny!"

"What was the rooster doing on the street?"

"He was—ha, ha, ha!—walking along. Don't ask me to tell you the rest. I can't do it without choking!"

Mr. Bowser rocked back and forth and slapped his leg and grew purple in the face, and the cat sat up and looked at him out of eyes as big as saucers. Kitten and cat, she had been in the Bowser family for years, and she had never seen the head of the family so affected before. Mrs. Bowser was also looking, and as a suspicion began to grow in her heart she inquired:

"Did the butcher ask you out to drink when you bought the meat?"

"Course not—ha, ha, ha! I wish you could have seen that old rooster. No. The butcher didn't ask me out to drink. He had a jug of peach brandy, and when he struck an icy spot that old rooster's heels—ha, ha, ha!"

Mr. Bowser Weeps.

"And he treated you to peach brandy," she asked.

"I had to taste of it to tell him whether it was XXXX or not. When his heels flew up that old rooster spread his wings and clawed the air and yelled out and sailed around and—ha, ha, ha!"

For a minute Mr. Bowser was in danger of a stroke of apoplexy. Then his laughter died away in a long drawn groan and he looked at Mrs. Bowser in a pitiful way and asked:

"Isn't it too bad that my Cousin Joe is dead? Joe was a mighty good feller—mighty good. I can't think of him without crying."

"Do you realize," she asked, knowing the truth at last, "do you realize that you are intoxicated?"

"Me intoxicated?" he replied as he straightened up. "Never, sir—never! That old cat's as drunk as a lord, but I'm all right, all right. What makes you think I'm 'toxicated? Mighty funny you can't see that I'm sober and the cat has a jug on. Shay, Mrs. Bowser, ain't you sorry for my poor Cousin Joe?"

"I'm more sorry for you. You ought to be ashamed o' yourself!"

HIS FIRST TASTE OF WAR.

The Time When Schley Was Almost Scared to Death.

"The late Admiral Schley admitted in conversation with me one afternoon, sitting on the veranda of an Atlantic City hotel, that the first time he was under fire he was frightened almost to death," remarked Victor Murdock of Kansas.

"When Admiral Farragut at Mobile bay boarded my ship I was a young officer," said Admiral Schley, "and in the height of the battle the captain of my vessel was killed. I suddenly found myself face to face with a situation which for the moment seemed to take away all of my nerve.

"I was in a moment elevated to the command of a battleship in actual engagement. If I had been unnerved by the shot and shell before, I was almost terrified at that instant. In the midst of my predicament—for that is what it amounted to—Admiral Farragut boarded the ship. I do not know what thought came to him when he saw me, for my face must have betrayed my fear.

"Just at that moment a shell whizzed across the deck, cutting a line as cleanly as if it had been done by a chisel. Farragut turned around to me and said: 'Lieutenant, let's take our stand on this line. They say that lightning never strikes twice in the same place.'

"I was mighty glad to follow," said Admiral Schley. 'Farragut stood there with the shells bursting all around, and I shall never forget how big and grand he appeared.'—Washington Post.

Lion For Dinner.

On Christmas, 1874, a curious dinner took place in Paris. Some score of contributors and draftsmen of the Chasse Illustrée dined at Magny's restaurant under the presidency of M. Firmin Didot, the publisher, to taste the ham and heart of the last lion killed in Algeria by Constance Cheret. The flesh was found to be particularly firm and close grained, like that of a horse, but nevertheless quite palatable. The ham was preferred to the heart, which, although skillfully prepared with truffles, was pronounced somewhat tough and difficult of digestion.

TO DESTROY TENT CATERPILLARS.

Tent Caterpillars last season destroyed or damaged a great many orchards. The egg masses are to be found on the twigs of apple trees, and the caterpillars hatch out just after the leaf-buds open. The following methods are recommended by the Napanee Branch of the Department of Agriculture for the prevention of this pest.

BANDING—Uninfested trees frequently need to be protected from wandering caterpillars which have fallen from their original food-trees, or have been "jarred" therefrom, or are seeking new feeding grounds. These caterpillars can be prevented from climbing trees by banding the trunks, five or six feet up, with cotton or tree tangle-foot.

DESTROYING TENTS AND CLUSTERS OF CATERPILLARS—The nests of the American Tent Caterpillar may be removed while small, and the contained caterpillars destroyed. This may be done with the aid of long-handled tree-trimmers or with a brush, or the nests may be burned with a torch while the caterpillars are within them. The torch may be made of a mass of rags or cotton waste soaked in kerosene (coal oil) and tied on a long pole. Asbestos fibre soaked in kerosene and placed in a tin can nailed to one end of the pole makes an excellent torch. The flame should be passed below the nest so as to destroy it and the contained caterpillars care being taken not to injure the bark of the branches, a very difficult operation.

SPRAYING—When spraying apparatus is available the simplest and most convenient method is the application of Paris Green in the proportion of 1 lb. to 100 gals. of water or lead arsenate 2½ lbs. to 40 gals. of water, to the infested trees or parts of the tree, as the caterpillars are appearing from the eggs. Orchards which receive the regular poison sprays for Codling Moth and the Plum Curculio rarely suffer from Tent Caterpillars. Young caterpillars are killed by the poison before they are able to do much damage. After they are more than half grown it is much more difficult to kill them by arsenical preparation; and they should therefore be attended to early in the season. When it is necessary to spray, especially for these pests, it is usually sufficient to apply the mixture to the foliage and the particular branches which are attacked. Lead Arsenate is perhaps to be preferred on account of its adhering quality.

PARIS GREEN—Paris green, 1 lb., Best grade quicklime 2 lbs., (prevents burning) water 100 gals.

PREPARATION—Paris green is made into a paste with a little water.

The quicklime is slaked with sufficient water and strained free of hard lumps. The Paris green paste and the Slaked Lime are then stirred into the required amount of water. Paris green particles are heavier than water and the spray mixture must be constantly stirred while spraying is in process. When the caterpillars are about or over one-third grown 120 gals. of water should be used.

LEAD ARSENATE—This insecticide may be obtained in quantity in the form of paste. This must be worked up in a small amount of water before being diluted. It is used on fruit and shade trees at the rate of 2½ lbs. to 40 gals. of water. This strength will readily control young Tent Caterpillars, but the older ones, one-third grown and over need a stronger spray, 4 lbs. per barrel, (40 gals.) of water. Lime is not needed with this insecticide.

When the hatching caterpillars are extremely numerous the stronger sprays may be used with advantage.

In orchard practice these are added to the fungicide rate given above. Paris green added to Bordeaux mixture or arsenate to either Bordeaux or sulphur wash.

It must be remembered that lead arsenate and Paris green are violent poisons.

DESTRUCTION OF USELESS AND NEGLECTED APPLE TREES—It too often happens that neglected Apple Cherry and Hawthorne trees are allowed to live in the neighborhood of apple orchards. On these Caterpillars, other leaf feeding insects, certain boring beetle pests breed undisturbed and spread to near by orchards. Careful attention should be given by orchardists for the removal of useless and dangerous trees as a protection of our native birds.

RECLAIMING OLD ORCHARD

There are thousands of old apple trees in this County present are bearing little or and in a great many cases are slowly dying. By proper care these old trees can be restored and made to bear profitable fruit. Why set out young trees when you can take on an average of ten years to come into bearing, when the returns can be got from the old neglected orchard property.

The first step is to scrape off the rough dead bark from the trunk and larger limbs. Then prune out all dead wood first. The branches that touch or rub the tree is too high, lower by cutting the top branches to a lateral branch the first year should not be severe. All large cuts should be coated with white lead and linseed oil or coal tar.

If you will carefully examine the bark of almost any old trees find it covered with thousands of scales, This is the Oyster Scale. It weakens the tree by sucking the juices, and will slowly kill the tree. To get rid of it, spray the tree thoroughly with a strong Lime-sulphur solution before the buds burst. This also prevents all fungus diseases Black Rot Canker, Blight, Apple Leaf Spot, Blister-mite, etc.

To prevent wormy apples spray the trees thoroughly just as the blossoms have fallen.

Old orchards should be manured and plowed shallow early in the spring but cultivation should not be later than the middle of June. A cover-crop should be sown in the fall and ripen the new wood. For further information on spraying orchards call at the Agricultural Office, Napanee.

EXPERIMENTS IN WEED ERADICATION.

During the season of 1912, the Ontario Agricultural Experiment Station carried on co-operative experiments in the eradication of Perennial Thistle, Twitch Grass, Bladder Plow and Wild Mustard. A number of practical men took part in the experiments and some very interesting and valuable results were obtained. A properly cultivated crop was found to be an excellent method of destroying Perennial Sow Thistle, Twitch Grass. Rape proved effective in destroying Twitch Grass and did not injure the crop. Deep cultivation followed by corn gave good results in the control of Bladder Plow. Experiments with Iron or Copper Sulphate to be a cheap and effective method of destroying Mustard in growing crops without injury to the crop.

MONTREAL MARKET.

MONTREAL, April 28.—There was a fair demand from foreign buyers for Manitoba wheat in nearby positions and as the prices bid were much higher than for future shipment sales of a few loads were made. Cables on oats were stronger at an advance of 1 1/4d and sales of 100,000 bushels were made for June-July shipment, but the prices bid for barley were out of line. The local trade in coarse grain was quiet. Foreign bids for spring wheat flour were 1s to 1s 6d per sack below millers' asking prices. The local and country demand was fair at firm prices. Millfeed continues quiet and easy. The tone of the market for butter is weak and prices are 1c per pound lower with only a limited demand. Cheese is quiet. THE PAINS OF HELL EXPLAINED TO US

Prevalent Misconceptions of the Bible's Teachings.

Dangers of Ignorance and Superstition—The Worship of Hypocrisy and Fear Great Spurs—God Seeks Worship Only From the Reverential and True-Hearted—Popular Misconception of Hell.

Paterson, N. J., April 27.—Pastor Russell preached in the Opera House this afternoon. His text was: "The sorrows of death compassed me, and the pains of hell gat hold upon me." —Psalm 116:3.

The Pastor declared that his text, like many other Bible statements, is so grievously misunderstood as to prevent Christian progress. Many noble hearts, he claimed, are famishing for lack of refreshment of God's Truth. The channels of thought are blocked by fossilized errors of the Dark Ages. The ports of our hearts should be deepened and widened by the blowing up of the false and devilish hell doctrines, which hinder us from receiving spiritual nourishment. There exists "a famine for hearing the Word of God."

If this text were the only one mis- translated and misunderstood, he said, the ordinary reader would doubtless pass it by as a figure of speech. But it is merely one of a combination of mistranslation, all of which are connected with an eternal torment system of doctrines invented during the Dark Ages. This power of error is turning intelligent minds away from the Bible. Hence it is our duty to break down these false doctrines, and to clear away whatever hinders the flow of Truth to the minds of God's people.

The Psalmist is merely telling of his severe illness, from which by the grace of God he recovered. He would have it understood that it was not merely a slight ailment. Hence he described it as "the sorrows of death"—that is, the sadness associated with the thought that he was about to die, about to leave his friends. In poetic Hebrew, he repeats the thought in the next statement—"the pains of hell gat hold upon me." They were the pains of approaching dissolution. There is not the slightest reference to the future.

Why Not the Whole Truth.

In their revised translation of the Bible, our Baptist friends use the expression, "the underworld," instead of hell. Yet even here is danger that the average reader may not catch the true thought. Far simpler and wiser it would be, had the translators said, "the pains of the tomb."

Every learned minister knows that the Hebrew word Sheol really means the grave, the state of death. Why do they hesitate to tell the people? Why do they translate it sometimes the grave, and other times the under- world? Why do they use the trans-

Wedding Celebrations. In countries fire is an essential connection with wedding celebration. For example, in Persia, Zoroastrians, the ritual is the front of a fire. In Nineveh, the priest, taking the company by the little finger, leads them to an apartment where a fire is kindled and there instructs the guests in their duties, extinguishing the fire by conclusion. In Japan, the bride kindles a torch, and the groom lights one from it, the fire of the bride being burned out.

His Compliment. Weeks back a wedding breakfast given by a substantial farmer with five daughters, the groom was a bride. A neighboring farmer, who was honored with invitation, thinking no doubt upon the event, addressed the group thus:

W. C. T. U. The relation between prohibition and woman suffrage seems, by a few people who declare themselves in favour of the suppression of the Liquor Traffic to be overlooked. Not so with the liquor interests, however, who fight woman suffrage with a deadly earnestness. The argument that woman suffrage has done nothing for Temperance strangely enough came from their ranks. A few facts in refutation are worthy consideration. In the two years that the state of California has had woman suffrage the dry towns have increased from 200 to 682. In the forty-three years that women have had the vote in Wyoming 90% of the state has gone dry. Two years after securing woman suffrage in Finland complete prohibition was also secured. And it is well known that in Ontario over 80% of the women's vote is polled for local option. These are only a few instances. In the war against the liquor traffic women who find in their hands this new weapon of extermination of evil are using it against this traffic. And everywhere men who are in earnest in this war against evil work openly and fearlessly for woman suffrage.

the grave, the state of death. Why do they hesitate to tell the people? Why do they translate it sometimes the grave, and other times the underworld? Why do they use the translation, the grave, in one place, the pit in another, and then refuse to translate it in a third place, giving instead the original word Sheol? Was it their intention to confuse the people? What is the motive? We wish that some of these great men would explain.

The Reason For All This.

We would like to have our ministerial brethren state their reasons for hindering the truth on the subject of hell. Only because they decline to do so, do we feel at liberty to make suggestions. These ministers seem to be of two classes, with slightly different reasons for silence on this subject. They seem to agree that it is dangerous to tell the people that God is really a God of love, and that the doctrines of eternal torment is unscriptural, promulgated during the Dark Ages by men who burned one another at the stake.

The Pastor declared that one class of ministers seem to fear that if people saw the errors of the creeds, they would discredit the ministers who had taught these doctrines. But why fear to tell the truth? Perhaps they fear that people will lose confidence in their teachings, and that the party walls of Christendom, which have so long divided God's people, will fall. Since they will not tell us, we can only surmise.

Other ministers, he said, have become higher critics, and do not believe the Bible. They prefer to pose as believers, and hope for the time when all the wealthy and intelligent will have become unbelievers also. Then they will say, "We have been unbelievers for many years, but have kept it secret, fearing to be misunderstood as opponents of the best interests of society."

The latter class constitutes the greatest menace to law and order, and are Satan's best agents in destroying faith in God's Word. Ingersoll's methods of antagonizing the Bible were far less successful than are those of modern higher critics and evolutionists.

Would it not be wise to inquire to what extent false doctrines are responsible for the increase of wickedness? Will monstrous, unthinkable delusions produce better results than will the simple Message of God's Love? The Gospel is a wonderful power for good.

GIVE YOUR BOY A FARM

Every farmer wants to provide for his sons, but seldom will the old homestead, developed with toil, suffice to meet their needs. The boys have been brought up to the land. They are familiar with all the phases of farming. They should have land of their own. How is the farmer going to meet this emergency?

The Logical Answer is Western Canada.

Thousands of acres, divided into 160 acre farms, are being thrown open for entry by the Dominion Government along or near the lines of the CANADIAN NORTHERN RAILWAY.

The land gives a wide chance. There are some plots on the open prairie and others again in the well-wooded, well-watered districts in Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta.

A large number of these homesteads are particularly adapted to mixed farming.

Any agent of the Canadian Northern Railway, or the undersigned will be glad to send, on application full information as to the location of these homesteads and the way to secure and reach them. is a student at Strassburg University, was caught in the midst of a noonday canter, and made such haste to the Polygon ground that he went without luncheon.

By one o'clock—hardly two hours after the "Kaiser's order" arrived—the entire garrison was assembled on the Polygon. The troops numbered about 18,000—exactly half an army corps—and their bayonets, rifles, guns and lances shone brilliantly in the midday sun.

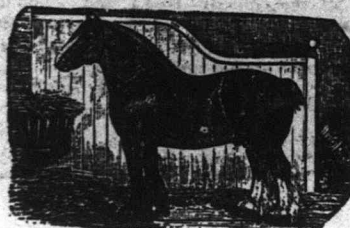

The event was made still more impressive by the appearance overhead of a new army warship which sailed from its temporary headquarters at Baden-Baden to participate in the parade. As the Kaiser, who is seldom late, failed to arrive at 12 o'clock, a rumor presently spread that his majesty was in the airship and would land from it.

After the garrison and the throng of between 20,000 and 30,000 spectators had waited on the field till two o'clock, a council of war was held and it was decided the chief of police should dash back to the town, a distance of two and one-half miles, in his motor car, and ask Berlin by telephone if any light could be thrown on the mysterious non-appearance of the Kaiser.

Word came back that his majesty, far from being in Alsace-Lorraine or intending to be there, was at the exact opposite corner of the empire at Koenigsberg.

FABULOUS TABLE ANIMALS.

Such as Welsh Rabbit, Scotch Woodcock and Mock Crab.

When one comes to think of it, it is surprising how many fabulous animals come regularly to the dinner table or supper table.

Among them, of course, the most familiar is the Welsh rabbit, which in its original form was merely toasted cheese. Some folks declare that the name is a corruption of "rarebit," but this has never been proved.

Then there is the golden buck, which is a Welsh rabbit with a poached egg on top. Chinese rabbit is a Welsh rabbit with rice in it, and a Mexican rabbit (otherwise known as a Spanish rabbit) contains tomatoes and onions.

So much for rabbits. But how many people are familiar with the Cape Cod turkey? Plenty in New England, where codfish goes under that name.

Scotch woodcock is two slices of hot buttered toast, with an anchovy on each slice and a sauce made of half a pint of milk and the yolks of three eggs poured over them.

Less familiar perhaps is English monkey, which is made by soaking a cupful of breadcrumbs in a cupful of milk and adding a tablespoonful of melted butter, a beaten egg and half a cupful of grated cheese, the whole, with salt and pepper added, being poured over toasted crackers.

The mock turtle is one of the most familiar of fabulous table animals, being served in the form of soup. In "Alice's Adventures in Wonderland" will be found a striking picture of this remarkable reptile, represented with the body of a turtle and the head of a calf.

Mock duck is a roll of chopped meat and breadcrumbs baked. Mock crab is made by mixing equal parts of grated cheese and butter, seasoning with salt, pepper and vinegar and adding a few drops of anchovy sauce. The paste thus prepared is spread on slices of dry toast or sometimes served in crab shells.

Last, but not least remarkable, of these mythological animals, known only to the kitchen naturalist, is the corn oyster, which is a small fritter of

ENGAGEMENT RINGS

ALL GERMANY LAUGHED.

Another Hoax Perpetrated on the Kaiser's Army.

Not since the German cobbler Voigt impersonated a captain in the imperial army and made a raid on the town hall at Koenigsnick, has all Germany laughed so long and loud as the other day, when a discharged sergeant in the German army sent a bogus telegram and caused the garrison at Strassburg to turn out in dress parade. This sergeant, August Wolter by name, provoked because he was dismissed from the service on the ground of being mentally defective, vowed he would get vengeance and show he was not crazy. The telegram was carefully worded and told the commander of the garrison that the Kaiser would be on hand to inspect his troops.

Disguised as a messenger, Wolter himself delivered this message to the garrison. "Arrive at 12; am coming by motor car, proceeding to Polygon parade ground. Entire garrison is to be alarmed, Wilhelm."

The effect of the message was electric. Sublimely oblivious of the fact that the Kaiser was at that very moment at Koenigsberg, about 1,000 miles away, Gen. Baron von Egieffstein, the military governor of Strassburg, proceeded to act on the supreme war lord's supposed instructions with the utmost alacrity.

Fife and drum corps were sent scurrying through the streets to sound the alarm that all officers and soldiers on leave should hurry back to barracks with all possible speed. Prince Oscar of Prussia, the Kaiser's fifth son, who

"What a splendid woman she is!" "I am glad to think you have got such a wife."

"Such a wife! Why, man, you have no idea of her generosity. When I was poor she refused to marry me because she was afraid of being a burden upon me, but the moment I came into my fortune she consented at once. What do you think of that for kindness?"

To Our Friends and Neighbors

You know us. You know we would not—that we could not afford to—go back on our word. Nor can you afford to ignore this money-back-if-not-satisfied offer on this splendid laxative.

We honestly believe we have the best bowel remedy ever made—the most pleasant-to-take, most permanently beneficial laxative for relief from the miseries and dangers arising from constipation.

We wouldn't say this if we didn't believe it to be true. We wouldn't risk our reputation by making such statements did we not feel sure you would find them true.

Our faith is built both on the knowledge of what Rexall Orderlies are made of and on observation of very many severe cases in which they have proven their merit.

Try them at Our Risk

If they do not abundantly prove their merit with you also—if you are not entirely satisfied with them—we will refund your money—and we will do that on your mere say-so. We don't ask you to risk a penny. Isn't that fair?

Just let the bowels fail in properly doing their work—just let their action be delayed and incomplete and the entire system and every other organ suffers. Wastes that should have been dispelled remain to poison the system.

Headaches, biliousness, nervousness and other tormenting and serious ills are common when the bowels fail to act daily as nature intended. All this may be avoided, if you will accept our advice.

Rexall Orderlies

taste just like candy. They are soothing and easy in action. They do not cause griping, nausea, purging or excessive looseness. They tend to tone and strengthen intestinal nerves and muscles. They promptly relieve constipation, and help to permanently overcome it.

Rexall Orderlies promote better spirits and better health. In all of these things they are vastly superior to old-fashioned, harsh salts and other purgatives, which are not only unpleasant to take but which usually leave the bowels in worse condition than before. We particularly recommend Rexall Orderlies for children, aged and delicate persons.

Rexall Orderlies come in vest-pocket tin boxes. 12 tablets, 10c; 36 tablets, 25c; 80 tablets, 50c.

GOLD NUGGETS.

There is a Curious Resemblance Between Them and Meteorites.

How do nuggets of gold originate? Sometimes a mass of the precious metal worth a thousand dollars or more is found. By what process was so much gold compacted into a lump?

An attempt was made not long ago to answer this question. An investigator in Australia cut and sliced and polished gold nuggets with the sole purpose of finding out just what is their structure. The first thing he discovered was that there is one curious point of resemblance between gold nuggets and meteorites. Both, when polished and etched with chlorine water, exhibit a crystalline structure. In the case of meteorites the lines thus exhibited on the etched surface are called Widmannstättian figures, and their presence is said to be one of the most invariable characteristics of those metallic bodies that fall from the sky to the earth.

But it is not meant to be implied that gold nuggets have fallen from the sky because they exhibit a crystalline structure recalling that of meteorites. The resemblance is apparently only superficial, and the crystals of the nuggets differ in form from those of the meteorites.

Another curious fact is that when a nugget is heated in a Bunsen flame explosions take place on its surface. Blisters are formed which continue to swell until they burst with a sharp report and bits of gold are violently scattered about. It is evident that the nuggets contain either gases or some liquids or solids which are easily converted into the gaseous form, the expansion of which produces the explosions.—Harper's Weekly.

It is the greatest possible to imagine that the work of a known author has little chance being done to it. It matters of fact, as carefully as that of the writer whose household word—even more publishers are always on the look for new authors of merit and for a "reader" to miss be a serious matter. Any would much rather produce novel from an unknown harmediocre one from a well-known for the reason that his margin fit is so much greater in the case than in the latter, and cases he may thus exploit a gold mine.

But, of course, thousands of uncles are declined every through any lack of merit. be excellent books, but to suit the particular publisher. Thus, some firms do not care historical novels; others figures dealing with theatrical biography, which one publisher eagerly accept, another would look at, and so on. Each had his own well-defined request and won't go outside them.

jection in hundreds of cases reflection on the merits of it simply means that the author taken it to the wrong market.

Again, publishers are wary book that breaks fresh ground reading public is very common and does not take kindly to departure from its normal direction. book may be brilliantly successful, may achieve a big success; an experiment, a speculation such dangerous to handle. I ing examples of this are "Vivian" and "Booth's Baby," both stories, and destined to great ity, but each was coldly received one house after another, since it was something quite the beaten track, and thus risk.

In fiction, it should be remembered it is the telling of the story counts principally. Of two one of which contains fresh and an original plot, but lacksness and style, and the other familiar lines, but is told in taking manner, the latter has a chance of acceptance; if have said, the reading public conservative, and so long as holds them fascinated to the mere fact that they have "same kind of thing" a doctor does not seem to matter at all.

ONTARIO LEGISLATURE

Here are seven facts in connection with the charges made by William Proudfoot, member for Centre Huron, against Sir James Whitney and Hon. W. J. Hanna regarding the settlement of the Taylor Scott claim against the Government. Since the case is now being investigated before the Committee on Privileges and Elections it would be unfair to say anything about the guilt or innocence of the accused. These seven facts however, are not mere statements but are facts based on the actual events in the Legislature. After the investigation is all over the general public will be the real jury to decide on the merits of the case and give the final verdict:

1. Mr. Proudfoot made every effort to investigate the Government's connection with the Taylor Scott settlement in the Public Accounts Committee. Here, however, he was blocked at every turn by the Conservative majority. The e-sential questions he asked Mr. Taylor were declared irrelevant and the Committee went so far as to have these enquiries together with the discussion on them expunged from the records.

2. Sir James Whitney, after the deadlock in the Public Accounts Committee, gave out a statement in the Legislature on Monday, April 21st, in which he admitted that Hon. W. J. Hanna had taken a campaign contribution from the Taylor Scott Company during the lifetime of this man's contract with the Government; that Mr. Hanna had expressed his sorrow that he had done so since he knew it was against the rules of the Government.

3. Both the Chairman of the Public Accounts Committee and the Prime Minister told Mr. Proudfoot if he had charges to lay them before the House.

4. When Mr. Proudfoot finally did so the very people who had said "Let the charges be brought to the House," were indignant when the accusations were really made.

5. Mr. Proudfoot asked that the charges be investigated by a Royal Commission directed by two judges of the Supreme Court of Ontario, to be appointed by the Government. This is what was done in the Gamey charges in 1903. Sir James, however, and his followers, voted down this proposal and handed the enquiry over to the Committee of Privileges and Elections composed of 29 Conservatives and 7 Liberals.

6. A large part of the jury chosen to decide the case—that is the Conservative members on the Committee—cheered wildly for the two men who were to be the defendants in the case.

7. Both Sir James Whitney and Hon. W. J. Hanna, the defendants, themselves voted on the division that decided to refer the charges to a Committee instead of a Royal Commission.

The following is word for word the charge made by Mr. Proudfoot:

"I, William Proudfoot, a member of the Legislature for the Electoral District of Centre Huron, in the Province of Ontario, Dominion of Canada, declare that I am credibly informed, and I believe that I can establish by satisfactory evidence:

"That Taylor, Scott & Company entered into a contract with Hon. William J. Hanna, the Provincial Secretary of the Province of Ontario for and on behalf of the said Province on the 20th day of July, A. D., 1905, for the term of five years from the 1st day of September, 1905, to the 1st day of September, 1910, whereby said company was to manufacture washboards and other articles as therein set forth at the Central Prison, belonging to the said Province. The said Province to maintain and provide the woodwork to the department, amounted only to the sum of $19,163.02.

"A defence was put in by the Province, disputing the whole of which was according to the reports of the Government official unfounded.

"Great delay in the prosecution or adjustment of said claim was caused by the said Provincial Secretary corruptly and improperly endeavoring to obtain in the meantime a letter or document from the said Taylor withdrawing all charges made by the said Taylor in the premises.

SIR JAMES IMPLICATED.

"In November, 1911, after the then approaching general elections were announced, the said George C. Taylor insisted on said claim being disposed of before the elections, again making use of the same arguments on which the said fiat was granted. On the strength whereof he succeeded, through the said Hon. Sir James Pliny Whitney and the Hon. the Provincial Secretary, in having the claim referred to the said L. E. C. Thorne as sole referee, without appeal, his award to be made within 30 days from said date, and the amount found to be due paid within 60 days from said date.

"The said referee was appointed on Saturday, November 18th, 1912, at 4 p. m. He made an award on the 21th of said month, without taking evidence whereby he found the said firm entitled to $21,068.03. This sum was paid on January 17th, 1912. The said referee was paid $500 by the Province and $750 by the said firm for his services."

MR. PROUDFOOT.

"I charge the said Hon. William J. Hanna and Sir James Pliny Whitney with illegally, corruptly and improperly causing the issue of said fiat, and entering into the agreement to refer the said claim to the award of the said Thorne, and I ask for the appointment of a Royal Commission to investigate the conduct of the said parties in connection with the Taylor, Scott & Co., claim and the statements and transactions hereinbefore detailed.

"I further charge that the actions of the said Hon. Sir James Pliny Whitney and Hon. W. J. Hanna, whilst respectively being Premier and Provincial Secretary, in connection with the said contract and adjustment thereof, the granting of the fiat and the settlement of arbitration and payment of the amount awarded, together with the demand for and acceptance of the said sum of $500 by the said W. J. Hanna in manner for the purposes above set forth, are and were unlawful, corrupt and improper acts on the part of the said Hon. Sir James Pliny Whitney and the Hon. W. J. Hanna and that the same are contrary to the law and practice of Parliament and of this Legislative Assembly, and are subversive of good government and

The said Province to maintain and provide the woodwork- ing shop then installed in said prison, and to supply a minimum of eighty men, and if more are required, up to a total of one-third of the total prison- ers. The said Taylor, Scott & Com- pany to pay therefore, according to the schedule set forth in the said agree- ment and also in an agreement which was subsequently come to between the said parties.

CLAIMED DAMAGES.

"In the years 1907 and 1908 certain disputes arose between the said parties in which the said Taylor Scott & Com- pany claimed that the Province was not fulfilling and had not fulfilled its said agreement, whereby they claimed to be entitled to damages.

"The said dispute, and others which arose from time to time, continued down to the 18th day of November, 1911, when same were referred to one L. E. C. Thorne for adjudication.

PARTY CONTRIBUTION.

"In the year 1908 the said Taylor, Scott & Co., or George C. Taylor, was requested to make a contribution to the party funds of the Provincial Con- servative party of the said Province, then being in office, or to the Pro- vincial Secretary aforesaid, and in ac- cordance with such request did con- tribute and pay over to the Provincial Secretary the sum of $500, the said payment being illegal, corrupt and subversive of good government.

"In the beginning of the year 1911, the said firm of Taylor, Scott & Co., made various efforts to secure a settle- ment of their claim without success. Finally they applied to the Hon. the Attorney General for a fiat to enable them to commence legal proceedings. The claim then put forward was for the sum of $19,463.02, made up of damages suffered through various alleged breaches of said agreement.

APPLICATION DELAYED.

"The application for the said fiat was greatly delayed and the said George C. Taylor decided that it could not be procured through the ordinary and proper channels. Thereupon, and upon a number of occasions, he inter- viewed the Hon. the Provincial Secre- tary, who took the ground that the said company had no valid or legal claim, and insisted on said fiat being granted, and accused the said Pro- vincial Secretary among other things as follows :

GRAVE IRREGULARITIES.

"That he, the said Hanna, had ac- cepted the said sum of $500 from the said Taylor, thereby leading the said Taylor to believe that his claim would be satisfied, and that the said sum was given for alleged political and party purposes, as hereinbefore set forth; that the said Hanna manipulated the opening and granting of certain coal tenders; that there were grave ir- regularities in connection with the purchase of certain self-feeding stokers and that the said Hanna had other- wise acted in an improper, corrupt and illegal manner, and against the good government of the Province and the administration of the public affairs thereof.

"All of these matters were laid be- fore the Hon. Sir James Pliny Whit- ney, Prime Minister of the Province of Ontario, and within a few days afterwards said fiat was granted, but on the understanding that it was not to be used for three months, The House was then in session.

DAMAGES INCREASED.

"This was followed by the service of a petition of right by the said firm, wherein they claimed $50,000 damages although their said claim, as presented

Once more sharp symptoms of hysteria threatened to develop, and Miss Harriet's most persuasive powers were taxed to avert an alarming outbreak.

"Hush, dear, hush!" she whispered soothingly, then turned to Richard. "Lord Croyland," she said, "there are circumstances connected with this strange affair which prevent me from explaining fully. Tomorrow, when Imogene and I are less nervous, perhaps we can make you acquainted with the reasons. For the present I beg you to let this man go quietly. We have nothing more to fear from him."

Richard hesitated, glancing from Miss Harriet to the prisoner.

"Of course, Miss Renwyck," he answered regretfully, "I must bow to your judgment, though in my opinion you would better allow me to turn this fellow over to the police. I imagine they would be inordinately glad to see him. But—just as you like. There is one more little matter, however, which I must insist upon." He turned to the prisoner. "This young lady," he said, quietly pointing to Miss Imogene, "has paid you a somewhat exorbitant price for her own rightful property. Oblige me by returning the amount."

"Oh, no, no; let him keep it!" begged the victim, but Richard was obdurate upon this point.

Mr. Roderick Fitzgeorge, having accomplished the real object of his visit, was glad to be released at any price, especially as the disposal of the letters was merely a device for entering the house and holding the ladies while his confederate rifled the safe. Without more ado he took the money from his pocket, tossed it upon the billiard table and turned to the library door.

"One moment," Richard demanded. "Miss Renwyck, turn this light upon him, please. Thank you. Now on me. I want this gentleman to know me if we chance to meet again."

After a moment's silent scrutiny the Texan spoke in a stern but level voice: "My friend, I am forced to let you go this time, though sadly against my inclination. You owe your release to the kindness of the ladies. The next time the affair will be mine. If you ever molest them again in any way I'll settle with you in a way we make use of in Texas. You understand? You are marked, my friend. I'd know your bad eye in Jericho. Yes, and I'd follow you there, too, for the pleasure of wringing your worthless neck. Now apologize to these ladies, then git!"

In Richard's present tone there was no suspicion of an English drawl, and Harriet marked it joyously, though half unconsciously, for the strain of fear and anxiety was now beginning to tell upon her nerves. Miss Imogene was ready for complete collapse, and the

"Lord Croyland," he asked, "did you open that window yourself?"

"I set the burglar alarm, and"—He took a step toward the wall. "By George! It's turned off!"

Now, Richard knew nothing whatever about the burglar alarm and began to feel icy beads of perspiration gathering on his brow, the more so as Mr. Renwyck was gazing at him in ill disguised and increasing suspicion.

"Oh, that!" he laughed. "I turned the lever before I raised the sash. Miss Renwyck explained it to me yesterday. Jolly little contrivance, 'pon my word. I should like immensely to have the system installed at Croyland Park."

The bogus earl looked innocent to the point of childishness, and the mystified host was forced to accept the very inadequate explanation of the episode. Without comment he closed the window, set the alarm once more, switched off the lights and silently, not to say grimly, led the way upstairs, meekly followed by the Texan, glad to have escaped further inquisition.

"I'm awfully sorry to have caused you all this bother," Richard apologized again as they reached the upper landing. "I'm no end of a nuisance, really."

"Don't mention it, I beg you," answered the financier, with forced courtesy. "I hope you will sleep now. Good night." Then the two parted and entered their respective rooms.

In a moment the trap had whirled through the open gates, and Mrs. Renwyck, marveling at what could take her lord away so suddenly, turned and went into the house, where she obediently telephoned her husband's message to her brother Michael.

Breakfast was late that morning, as two at least of the inmates of the house showed unmistakable signs of loss of sleep.

"How lovely!" exclaimed Miss Harriet as she glanced through a delicately tinted note, then turned to Richard. "Such a dear friend of mine is coming out this morning to stay over Sunday. I know you will be charmed to meet her."

"Delighted, I'm sure," drawled Richard indolently.

"Who is it, Harriet?" Mrs. Renwyck asked.

"Nellie Sempton."

Richard's indolence departed instantly. The name recalled several things.

"Er—beg pardon," he questioned, "is the lady rather tall and blond—about twenty-two or thereabout, with a ripping figure?"

"Why, yes!" cried Imogene delightedly. "Do you know her?"

"Well, no, not exactly," returned the smiling Texan. "She has—er—been pointed out to me." He screwed in his monocle and picked up a letter from Lord Croyland's mail which lay beside his plate. "I'm awfully sorry that I shan't be here when Miss Sempton arrives, but I find I shall have to go to New York this morning. Too bad, really."

"But you haven't even read your letters yet," chirruped Miss Imogene. "Can you tell from the outside that it's some horrid business?"

Richard nodded sadly and tapped a formidable official envelope.

"Too true," he murmured. "It's business and, as you aptly express it, horrid."

In one sense the Texan spoke the plain, unvarnished truth, for business of an unpleasant character called him in several directions. He had entirely forgotten until the mention of Miss Sempton's name recalled it to him that he had a smashed automobile on his hands, not to mention a prospective lawsuit from a justly irate farmer. Then, too, it would be most awkward to have the charming Miss Sempton extend her hand and say, with a most engaging smile: "How do you do, Mr. Peter Wilson? I knew you were not a chauffeur. How many other names do you happen to possess?" Yes, "horrid business" called him away from Irvington at once and bade fair to keep him away until Miss Sempton departed.

"Woolsey and I," he muttered to his inward, disgusted self, "must seek seclusion in some faroff, happier clime."

Breakfast was scarcely over when Mr. Corrigan was announced. He entered with a cheery good morning to every one, then went with Mrs. Renwyck to the library. Miss Schermerly strove with all her crafty wiles to lure Lord Croyland away for a morning walk and a chat on the superior advantages of being a nobleman, but the nobleman in question met guile with guile and pleaded an excuse of having to catch the next train. He said he would walk to the station, especially as on foot he might dodge Miss Sempton if she happened to come earlier than expected and started

The household was already in uproar. With Richard's Mrs. Renwyck was laid up and smelling salts were administered in such generous quantities returned to consciousness winning protests and gusts of remorse. Schermerly offered consolation in the form of various questions answered by the answers she that she retired to her room in a state of nervous indignation. Miss Corrigan crept close to the edge of the excitement and listened as if in a frozen trance. Both she and Harriet, to say nothing of Richard, had worked out a solution of the problem by the simple process of the three hearts sank to the depths of despondency. Undoubtedly added to the depression by a statement which gave at least the robbery.

"I'm not a bit surprised at said, "and it's all Jacob's being so puffed up and bullet which was truly an Irish misadventure."

"What do you mean?" Mrs. Renwyck, instantly to the side of her abused husband.

"Why, simply this," said the lawyer coolly. "There was a vagrant nosing around the place a few days ago, and I warned him to place a detective in the house the diamonds were in this to his, but he wouldn't do it."

Harriet flushed and bit her tongue. The Texan gave evidence of apoplexy, and Richard listened with cold shivers frolicked up his spine. The Texan could "cock eyed vagrant," and all he could place the confederate evidently helped himself to tents of the safe while Mr. Fitzgeorge engaged the ladies in the billiard room. It was all so pitifully simple! The diamonds were gone, and so was Woolsey Blane.

Richard's trip to New York out of the question. He refused to face the music, though he must pay the fiddler was a he dared not dwell upon. Only hope Miss Sempton would appear until it was all over. Now burning to get hold of and confess everything and shout out the truth from his housetop.

While not personally responsible for the loss of the diamonds, he was morally responsible in the fact that he had allowed Lord Croyland's valet to remain under the Renwyck roof when he knew in that the man was not a character to be trusted. The real master had discharged the thief, and he never dawned on Richard that he might flinch from any one else—master—the lawful prey of his kind—still it was his duty to discharge the rascal without delay. Truly, the humor of the situation in much the same condition missing gems.

With a very solemn face, but a good deal of inward pleasure, Michael telephoned to Mr. Blane. He had given sound advice, a had derided him, booted at him, and had him to scorn and had suggested that he look under the bed for a burglar. Mr. Corrigan by his precepts should have been for his brother-in-law, but the little Irishman was not. On

In Richard's present tone there was no suspicion of an English drawl, and Harriet marked it joyously, though half unconsciously, for the strain of fear and anxiety was now beginning to tell upon her nerves. Miss Imogene was ready for complete collapse, and the two stood trembling in each other's arms.

The burglar mumbled a stumbling apology, then passed into the library through the door which Richard opened for his exit. He lost no time in stepping through the still open window and in a moment more was skulking across the lawn.

"Lord Croyland," began Miss Harriet, who had followed from the billiard room with Imogene clinging hopelessly to her arm—"Lord Croyland, I want to thank you for"—

The words died suddenly upon her lips, and she leaned for support against the wall.

"Who's there?" called a voice in the darkness from the stairs in the hall.

"Quick!" whispered Richard to the terror-stricken girls. "It's your father! Go back into the billiard room and slip upstairs when you get the chance. There! It's all right. Leave it to me."

He gave them no chance to disobey, but pushed them through the door, while he spurred his brain for some good excuse to account for his presence in the library at this unseemly hour.

"Who's there?" Mr. Renwyck called, and this time Richard answered back:

"Hello! It is I! Will—er—I mean Croyland. Is that you, Mr. Renwyck?"

He grabbed a book at random from one of the shelves, then drew the hall portieres aside, to discover his host, revolver in hand, on the dim lit stairs, arrayed in a long white night robe, which made him look more gaunt and angular than ever.

"Oh, it's you!" said Mr. Renwyck in great surprise. "I thought I heard a noise—a shot or something—and got up to investigate. Why in the name of heaven aren't you in bed?"

"I'm awfully sorry to have disturbed you," the Texan answered easily. "I—I—stumbled over a beastly chair in the dark. Too bad, upon my word! You see," he explained, "I couldn't sleep, so I came down here to take a liberty and a book."

Mr. Renwyck glanced at his costume, which, with the exception of his dress coat, which had been exchanged for a house jacket, was the same his guest had worn earlier in the evening. The financier thought for a moment, then descended the stairs, entered the library and switched on the electric light. The first thing to catch his eye was an open window, which Richard in his haste had failed to close.

The Texan interpreted the blank astonishment so clearly written on Mr. Renwyck's face and proceeded to enlighten him.

"Fresh air," he murmured easily; "it's so beastly warm, you know. I rather fancy I'm a bit feverish, really."

Mr. Renwyck frowned thoughtfully. "Lord Croyland," he asked, "did you open that window yourself?"

"To be sure," lied Richard suavely, while he screwed in his ever ready monocle, thanking God that he had not laid it aside. Somehow the thing seemed to give him confidence now. It was something to cling to. "No harm, I trust?"

"Well, no," returned Mr. Renwyck slowly, "only I don't understand why it didn't raise a hullabaloo. I'm posi-land. 'Tm no end of a nuisance, really."

"Don't mention it, I beg you," answered the financier, with forced courtesy. "I hope you will sleep now. Good night." Then the two parted and entered their respective rooms.

"Strange," muttered Mr. Renwyck as he pulled the sheet about his chin. "A peculiar lot, these Englishmen. But I dare say I appear just as peculiar to them. He acted so strangely, too, about that check the other night. One hundred thousand dollars! Humph! I wonder if he has a hundred thousand dollars. I begin to doubt it—doubt it exceedingly."

Meanwhile the Texan reached his room, mopped his brow and hunted for his brandy flask. It seemed to him that he wanted a good stiff drink as he wanted nothing else in all the world. He failed to find his flask in its accustomed place and surmised accurately that if he found Woolsey Bills he might strike its trail. The valet's sleeping room was next his own, so without ceremony the master pushed open the door, admitting a flood of light. He did not find his flask, nor did he find his servant either, for the room was deserted, and the bed had not been occupied.

"Ah!" observed the Texan thoughtfully. "Bre'r Fox has changed masters for the second time. Humph! A little awkward to explain—for me, I mean."

On Restmore a heavy silence fell again, which was broken, as before, only by that antique clock and its soft chime as it struck another quarter hour. Then two dim, ghostly figures crept slowly up the stairs and entered Miss Harriet Renwyck's room. In a little while they were safely tucked in bed and lay whispering in each other's arms.

"Oh, Harriet, darling," breathed Miss Imogene, "wasn't he—er—just splendid when he told that bouncer? I don't believe he's an Englishman at all."

"Nonsense!" the other laughed. "Of course he's an Englishman. Now try to go to sleep."

It would be discourteous in the extreme to state that a lady had been guilty of another "bouncer," but at any rate Miss Harriet clasped a drowsy little figure to her breast, thought of Texas and smiled into the darkness happily.

CHAPTER XIX.

AT 7 o'clock the next morning Mr. Renwyck had a telephone call from his partner in New York.

It was of such a serious nature as to cause him to dress hurriedly and leave without waiting for his breakfast, though Mrs. Renwyck followed him to the front veranda, begging him to wait for a cup of coffee.

"No; haven't time!" he snapped as he climbed into the waiting trap. "Go along, Walters. Whoa! Wait a minute. By George," he exclaimed, with a frown of annoyance, "I forgot about those jewels!" He fumbled in his pocketbook, produced a memorandum and handed it to his wife.

"Julia," he said hurriedly, "this is the combination of the safe. Telephone to Michael, will you, and ask him to come over before he leaves for town? Get him to unlock the safe and bring the diamonds with him to my office. I'll put them in the safety deposit vault. There—haven't time to explain any more. My train is due in three minutes. Goodby. Now, Walters, let Mgly have her head."

the nobleman in question met guile with guile and pleaded an excuse of having to catch the next train. He said he would walk to the station, especially as on foot he might dodge Miss Sempton if she happened to come earlier than expected, and started across the lawn.

On the lawn he lingered in the hope of seeing Miss Harriet once more, for he did not wish to leave Irvington without confessing his deception and declaring himself her humble worshiper from the Lone Star State. He had almost given up hope when he spied her coming from the house toward him. She, too, had been dodging difficulties in the path of a meeting with him alone. And now as she tripped across the grass he saw in her eyes a light, on her cheeks a color which caused his heart to bound, while the warm blood tingled through his veins.

"Lord Croyland," she said, "before you go I want to thank you for what you did for Imogene and me last night. It was splendid of you to take the blame, and"—

"But how do you know what I did?" he asked her laughingly.

"Because," she stammered, "we—we didn't go upstairs when you told us. We stayed in the billiard room and— and listened." She finished with a violent blush, which made her irresistible in the Texan's biased eyes.

"Oh!" he laughed. "I see."

Miss Harriet did not join in his merriment. She looked up earnestly and asked:

"Why didn't you tell the whole truth and explain to father?"

"Explain to father!" he echoed, mistaking her meaning. "Good Lord! How could I?"

Miss Harriet nodded, smiling happily.

"I think I understand. You wanted to save her?"

"Of course," answered Richard, relieved again. Really, these sudden shocks almost broke his nerve.

"Now, tell me one thing more," continued the girl. "You are not an Englishman. I suspected it before, and last night I knew it. Who are you?"

Richard gasped and took a backward step, while the hot blood mounted to his cheeks and tinged the dusky bronze.

"Who am I?" he repeated earnestly. "A man who loves you with his heart and mind and soul—a man who has deceived you only that he might be near you, to touch your hand and look into your eyes—a man who has followed you from Tex"—

"Harriet, Harriet!" came a cry of shrill distress from the front veranda. "Harriet, the diamonds! They are gone!"

Mrs. Renwyck clung limp and disheveled to the railing, while Mr. Corrigan strove to hold her up and at the same time murmur words of comfort in her ear, a task in which he was greatly handicapped by shortness of stature and disproportionate rotundity.

"Gone?" cried Harriet, whitening to the lips. "Gone where?"

Mrs. Renwyck immediately forgot family traditions, etiquette and everything else beside the crushing loss and her rising Irish blood.

"Don't be a fool!" she shrieked. "How do I know where they've gone? Do you think I've got 'em in my pocket? Police! Fire!"

With this dramatic finish Mrs. Renwyck promptly fainted, sinking down into a huddled heap and dragging little Uncle Michael with her.

Mr. Corrigan eyed him suspiciously and started away. Richard was about to ask permission to accompany him, intending again to lay bare his heart to his counsel, but at that instant his attention was arrested in an entirely different direction.

Woolsey Bills was coming toward him from the direction of the railroad station.

CHAPTER XX.

THE adventurer allowed Mr. Corrigan to walk away without offering any further remark. then waited patiently for his servant to reach the porch.

"Good mornin', your lordship," said Bills, with a look of guileless innocence which made the Texan long to throttle him on the spot.

Richard regarded him earnestly, striving to read the secrets of his soul, but came to the conclusion that the servant had no soul, inasmuch as the face before him was as placid as that of a slumbering babe.

"Bills," he said in his sternest tone, "come upstairs. There is a matter which we must settle now—at once."

Contrary to his expectations, the servant did not flinch, but followed him meekly to the upper floor. Once inside the room, the Texan locked the door and turned on his companion savagely.

"Now, my man, just give an account of yourself, and be quick about it!"

Richard had flung himself into the Morris chair, while the valet stood before him, nervously shifting his feet and picking at the brim of his hat.

"My lord!"—Richard cut him short.

"Drop that! This is no time for infernal nonsense! Well?"

"Yes, sir. Thank you, sir," Bills began again, though the task to which he had evidently nerved himself was proving larger than he at first supposed. "Mr. Williams, sir, I done wrong. I know that. An' I come back to tell you all about it, sir, an' ask your pardon, sir, if you'll be so good."

"Leave the trimmings out and get down to facts!" snapped Richard, with unconcealed impatience. "You sneaked off last night without permission. Why?"

"Because," confessed the valet, with a sudden spurt of courage—"because I forgot, sir, and drank your brandy up again. Mr. Williams, sir. Honest, sir, I was afeard you'd shoot me, an'—an' I went away to New York, intendin' to never come back again. I left w'llst you was 'avin' the play, sir."

"How did you get to New York at that time of night? There are no trains at that hour."

"No, sir. I know they ain't, I—I got on a freight train, sir."

The Texan looked at him keenly, then nodded permission for the balance of the fishy story.

"When I got to New York, sir," the valet continued, "I realized wot a bloomin' ass I was, Mr. Williams, sir, an' I confesses it now, sir, without no 'ope of coverin' up the fack."

"Bills," said Richard calmly, "it comes to me that this is the first gospel truth you have spoken. I have hopes of you yet. Go on."

time that he asked directions to the station."

"Yes, sir," answered Woolsey, flushing to his ears. "I did lie the first time, sir. I—I didn't want to seem uncharitable inclined."

The Texan sneered and turned upon his heel. After another contemplative turn up and down he once more faced the culprit.

"Look here, Bills; I haven't finished with you yet. I have only told you the lightest part of it. After failing to gouge money out of me you hold conversation with a suspicious character and acknowledge that you told a lie concerning it. Next you disappear, claiming to go to New York at a time when no trains were running. For the present we'll accept the story of the freight, but can look that part up later. In the meantime, while you are in New York, of course your cock-eyed friend drops in on Restmore at 3 o'clock in the morning. He—er—watches in the billiard room while a pal slips through the open window of the library, opens Mr. Renwyck's safe and drifts away with a cool hundred and fifty thousand dollars' worth of diamonds. Question is, Who was the pal? I don't happen to be either a detective or a fool, but I have my own ideas. Mr. Renwyck is coming out here presently with a couple of what you call 'bobbies,' I believe. I shall tell him everything about both of us"—and never did the humiliation of his position so enter into Richard's soul as when he had to class himself with that miserable travesty of mankind—"but I have an idea that you will shortly represent an expression used both here and in England, which is to say, 'Collected Bills.' Am I clear?"

As Richard forged this chain of evidence link by link the valet's terror became pitiful to behold. His eyeballs almost started from his head, while his putty-like complexion paled to an ashy gray. His slim hands shook, his weak legs quivered under him, till at last he collapsed and sank upon his knees.

"My Gawd, Mr. Williams, sir!" he gasped. "You don't believe I done it, do you? Honest, sir, I was in New York! W'y, it don't stand to reason, sir, that I'd come back 'ere immediately if I'd done it. 'Deed, sir, it don't stand to any sort o' reason."

"It does," flashed Richard. "You thought I'd swallow that cock and bull story of yours and be grateful for the dose. Why, you fool, the pill is as big as a football. We'll drop absurdity now and get down to business. Can you get those diamonds back?"

In vain Bills groveled at his master's feet, protesting his innocence with sobs and tears. It was no use. The evidence against him was too clear, and, while Richard himself was the real culprit in allowing the man to remain at Restmore at all, still, if he ever hoped to recover the stolen property, he must hold on like grim death to the bird in hand.

He put poor Bills through a sort of third degree, but without results further than copious tears and more copious protestations. Finally, his patience exhausted utterly, he took the terrified valet by the collar and dragged him to the door of the bathroom.

"Go in there!" he commanded in a low, tense tone, which was far more terrible to Bills than any shout he had ever heard. "Go in, I say, and stay there until I come for you. If you try

"O Lord!" he groaned. "The course of true love never did run smooth, but need it ride forever on a flea bitten, bucking broncho?"

CHAPTER XXI.

M. R. BILL WILLIAMS arrived in New York on Saturday morning. He had forethought enough to make the attempt and influence enough to succeed in it to have the limited stopped at One Hundred and Twenty-fifth street, where he took a fast auto cab, for which he had telegraphed, and was rushed directly to St. Luke's hospital on Cathedral heights. He paid the charge—expressing his firm conviction that the price was half the value of the machine and seven times the value of the thief who drove it—and hurried into the hospital, where he gave his name and begged to be taken to his afflicted son at once.

He was informed by the house surgeon that the patient was doing fairly well, though his temperature was still above normal. The physician thought, however, that the father's presence might rouse the patient's flagging spirits, but suggested that the first interview be short. A trim, fresh cheeked nurse was summoned, and without further ado she led the way to the elevator, which took them to the fourth floor. At the door of his son's room the old rancher paused.

"My dear," he said, "are you the young lady who has nursed my poor boy through this spell of sickness?"

"Yes, sir," answered the brisk young person in a tone somewhat more cheerful than the gravity of the occasion seemed to warrant.

"God bless you!" the anxious father murmured in a voice choked by his emotion. "Did—he—ask for me—often?"

The experienced young person hesitated, hanging for an instant between uncompromising truth and the wish to spare this kind old gentleman unnecessary pain. Womanlike, she decided upon charity rather than veracity.

"Oh, yes," she answered nervously, "though you know, of course, he—has been just—well, a little delirious, I fear. You must be careful not to excite him, to control your feelings, sir."

The Texan's great heart was touched. His boy had been shouting out his name, even while pain and fever held him in their raging grip. The father, who could have faced a battery of artillery in action without blanching, was greatly overcome by what he read in the nurse's halting words. He leaned for support against the wall and furtively brushed his eyes, then looked up, striving to smile, and asked:

"Was he conscious when my telegram arrived? Did he know? Was he glad to hear that I was coming?"

"Very," answered the adroit young woman, blushing to the roots of her chestnut hair, that peeped from under a saucy little cap. She had made the first plunge and had no hesitation in going the limit.

The father's heart went out at once to this dainty angel of mercy and efficiency who had ministered to grief and suffering. He fumbled in his pocket and produced a large, double figured note, which he pressed into her hand.

Then he took up his joyful. "I looked under the man last night, but he wasn't you know why? He slept tight to the safe, got up early with your diamonds with him. Honestly, it isn't a joke. I'm sure of the whole miserable truth. Your safe has been okeydoe made a clean sweep. What? Oh, Jacob, Jacob, you talk like that! It's against the Telephone Exchange." The end of the conversation was Renwyck, while very much over his harbor scheme, dropped business for the moment and listened to Irvington with amused detectives. He applauded Uncle Michael. "The merrier. I believe I'll have these gentlemen with several clues. I hate to say so!" Jake, but if you had me you—what? No, I won't! Goodbye." Mr. Corrigan left the telephone and Harriet and Imogene upstairs. The latter young woman was unable to restrain her anger, and in the seclusion of her room she gave vent to every grotesque despair to which the age of nineteen is subject. Renwyck was the busiest Samaritan, and her ministrations to the one made a word with the end of the question for the

"Yes, sir; thank you, sir. As I was a-sayin', there I was in a big city, sir, without much money an' no character an' no immediate prospect of a place. Says I to meself, 'Bills,' says I, 'you're a bloomin' ass. You left a gentleman wot was only jokin' 'bout shootin' you an' wot wouldn't hurt a 'air of your head for anything. Go back to him, Bills,' says I, 'an' tell 'im 'ow it 'appened. 'E's a kindly disposed gentleman with a sweet, forgivin' nature an' won't 'old it ag'in you that you was afeared of 'is terrible pistol, Mr. Williams, sir.'"

"H'm" sniffed Richard. "What was your other reason for coming back?"

The servant shifted uneasily, turned his hat round and round in his nervous hands and apparently decided to keep back nothing.

"Yes, sir," he began again; "I 'ad another reason. I fancied if I come back your lordship—er—I mean Mr. Willship—no, beg pardon—Mr. Williams, sir—that you would pay me wot you promised me, 'wich is better than starvin' to death in New York without no character, meanin' no offense an' awsk'in you not to be angrier than you can 'elp. I slept restless, Mr. Williams, sir. Then I come back. That's all."

"Is it?" asked Richard dryly.

"Yes, sir," answered the valet, with profound solemnity, "as Gawd is lookin' at us both, me a-standin' an' you a-sittin' down, m' lord."

The Texan arose and took several reflective turns up and down the room. Then he paused and stood with his hands in his pockets and his legs apart.

"Bills," he said, "I'm going to pay you a compliment. Without an exception you're the biggest liar between New York and San Antonio. It's a long stretch, my friend, and I'm not a flatterer."

Bills stared at him sadly, reproachfully, but made no answer. Richard continued:

"Of course I didn't see you when you left—that is, with my own eyes—and I didn't see you when you got off the train awhile ago, but just the same I have a chain of evidence which I trust will refresh your memory. When I employed you, you came to me with the following recommendations: 'Discharge him at once. He's a thief. The last time it was £2 6d. and my jeweled cigar cutter. His friend, Mr. Drake of Scotland Yard, is also inquiring for his address.' So much for your character as indorsed by your former master. If I hadn't been, as you aptly express it, 'a bloomin' ass,' I would have spared myself the mortification of stating the fact. I didn't discharge you and must take the consequences. But let us proceed. Next you tried to blackmail me for the purpose of extorting £300 from one who had treated you squarely. Item three: Both Miss Renwyck and I saw you in whispered conversation with a—well, a cock-eyed tramp who was going out of the front gate. By the way, what was it you said to him?"

Bills looked uncomfortable.

"'E awaked me for money, sir, an' I told 'im to go about 'is business, sir.' Richard wheeled upon the man sharply.

"You lie, Bills! You told me at the low, tense tone, which was far more terrible to Bills than any shout he had ever heard. "Go in, I say, and stay there until I come for you. If you try to escape, by heaven, I'll kill you! It isn't a joke this time. It's the word of a gentleman from Texas!"

The servant knew that his master told the truth, so he sank down upon the bare, cold tiles, where he lay in limp distraction until such a time as the terrible Texan came to pronounce his doom.

Richard saw that the bathroom window was far too small to admit of the man's escape. Then he closed and locked the door, placed the back of a chair beneath the knob and went downstairs. In the lower hall he encountered Mr. Van der Awe, whose mournful cast of countenance seemed but a foretaste of what fate had in store for him.

"Beg pardon, Lord Croyland," said that sad young gentleman, with a faint, wan smile, "can you tell me what happens to be the matter with Miss Chittendon?"

"Yes!" snapped Richard. "She's got the collywobblers. I've got 'em, too, so look out!"

The Texan crossed the lawn and flung himself upon an iron bench. Then he took his aching head between his hands and cursed the English aristocracy from Alfred straight down the line. The man's heart went out at once to this dainty angel of mercy and efficiency who had ministered to grief and suffering. He fumbled in his pocket and produced a large, double figured note, which he pressed into her hand.

"For you, my dear," he smiled, "a ribbon or something. There, there; it's nothing."

"But, Mr. Williams," she protested in charming confusion, "this is not at all necessary. I am paid, you know, by—really, I couldn't think of"—

"Honey," he interrupted, while he gave her plump shoulder a fatherly pat, "it's just a little secret between you and me. Now run along. I want to see Dickie alone."

Again the nurse hesitated and, like her prototype in the proverb, was lost. It was best to be present at the interview, yet how could she refuse so simple a request from this moist-eyed, generous old dear?

"Very well," she nodded; "I will stand outside. You promise to be very quiet?"

Debussy Songs Heard at New York Recital.

HARMONIES THAT JANGLE.

Few Women Apply Principles of Beauty That They Admire Publicly to Their Home Decorations—Drawing Room Done in a Remarkable Scheme.

Dear Elsa—I heard a group of Debussy songs at a recital yesterday afternoon. You know, dear, it's a cult among the musically elect to affect a liking for the works of this very advanced modern French composer. For a long while I have been trying to become an enthusiast of Debussy compositions, but the recital yesterday sounded the deathknell of my efforts in this direction.

The group of songs interpreted by a young English soprano whose name—well, I won't tell you the name, for I can't spell it, and I'm sure you could not pronounce it—did everything in her musical power to bring out the good qualities of the songs. Her efforts were futile, for this composer can bring together the most horrible collection of so called harmonious tones it has ever been my bad fortune to hear. The dictionary says that music is "the art of combining tones in a manner to please the ear." I don't think M. Debussy has ever consulted Noah Webster on this subject, for most of his stuff sounds like a small child strumming aimlessly on the keyboard of its mother's piano.

The artistic eye, however, was perfectly satisfied, even if the tympanum of one's ear received a cruel blow. The English vocalist who wrestled with the songs was the daintiest little creature imaginable. Her frock of tailored white satin was an unmistakable creation of a Parisian couturiere, and its simplicity was of the convincing genre. I will try to describe it. The skirt, a plain, rather scant affair, had as its only trimming a single row of medium sized crystal buttons arranged directly up the front seam.

Attached to the very simple bodice were scant panniers after the fashion of Watteau, and the same French artist must have inspired the plait named for him which adorned the back of the frock. This plait, however, did not hang out from the frock, but was applied flat except at the bottom, where it flared slightly. The sleeves set into the drooped shoulder seam were long and close fitting, ending in lace ruffles falling over the hands.

The inevitable touch of black, beloved of the Parisienne, came in the guise of a black chiffon scarf that fell to the waist line at the back and draped carelessly over the arms, being held to the bodice at the right side above the waist line by a chon of black velvet.

brown plush. Four others and a sofa were blue. For fear of missing a shade or two she had hung portieres of brown with a Persian border.

I omit mention of the black embroidered cushions. Naturally I expected to see a woman of uncultured taste. When she entered I was amazed to find dangling from her belt the insignia of a fraternity to which only college women were eligible.

Doubtless she knew all about the laws of harmony and could have defined music in the words I just quoted from the dictionary. But it had never occurred to her that the use of art is to beautify one's surroundings and to have a decided effect on habits of daily living. My hostess herself was beautifully gowned. Of course her dressmaker may have been responsible for the charming result, but there are numberless women who are really inspired when it comes to dressing themselves, but fall far short of the mark in their house furnishings. The ideal person combines the two accomplishments, and, like Browning, we comfort ourselves with the reflection "that the thing I aspired to be and am not comforts me." Until we gossip together again believe me yours devotedly.

TAILORED MODES.

Skirts, It is Said, Are to Be Both Plaited and Plain.

Braid, bows, loops and pipings are the finish that seems to have received the stamp of approval for gowns this spring. For the transition season the right material is some variety of Scotch wool, preferably of a rough weave, as zibeline, covert cloth (not the old smooth kind, but a wavy sort), serge, homespun and other frise stuffs. For colors the choice is for the soberer hues, such as dull green and claret, chestnut brown, gray, steel and ocher yellow.

Fine plain broadcloth may be confidently relied upon to appear when the ness about the nuance. The skirt of this model is draped and the slight bouffancy finished at the side with a long silk tassel. The coat is original in cut.

PACKING HINTS.

Good Things to Remember For the Spring Move.

See that the top of the talcum powder can is tightly closed.

Take as few bottles as are needed and see that the necessary ones are well wrapped in soiled clothes, the kimono or some other soft material.

Wrap shoes individually in soiled clothes or newspapers. This saves space.

If there are framed pictures, place them in the folds of a comfort or between pillows. If these are not available, skirts may be used.

Place books flatly on the bottom of the trunk.

Collars may be folded together in paper if a collar bag is not owned.

Clean handkerchiefs should be placed between laundered clothes if a handkerchief box is not in the belongings.

Posters or other papers to be preserved in smooth condition may be laid on the bottom of the trunk.

The chafing dish may be made to hold trinkets or if the lid is not to be tied on may afford space for a package.

If the tray is heavily packed be sure that it is well supported.

The Kitchen Floor.

The woman who does all her own housework may lessen her burdens greatly by giving attention to her kitchen floor other than its daily vigorous scouring. For perfect cleanliness it should be painted, oiled or covered with linoleum, but such a floor shows every bit of dust and is tiresome to the feet. Rugs made from two thicknesses of old carpet stitched together on the machine will be heavy enough not to kick about and if placed at outer doors prevent much tracking in of dust and mud. A large cushion with a stout brown denim cover will be found very comforting to weary feet when there are many dishes to wash or big ironings to do.

Once a week the floor margin should be cleaned with damp cloth over the broom, and if soiled spots exist around the stove they should be cleaned with a small scrubbing brush. Once each month the rugs should be removed and the floor thoroughly cleaned.

THE SPRING BLOUSE.

Absolute Plainness the Slogan of Best Waist Models.

The newest cream white blouses are more plain than ever. The prettiest are tulle valenciennes or a kind of soft point d'esprit with figures like those in the valenciennes design. One blouse of this material has not the slightest trimming or fullness except in the back, where there is a tiny bit to cover the opening and make it look like a narrow plait. The entire thing is made in one piece, the sole garnish being little button studs of black velvet in two rows at the throat, both back and front, and on the wrists. The neck is cut low and round, with cording of the lace in three rows. A noticeable feature of this blouse,

Chic, smart little colonial pumps in black kid with big antique buckles finished this very girlish and simple costume. And, Elsa, dear, it was such a relief to be able to see Miss John Bull's pretty feet under the short skirt that had no suggestion of a "slit."

Speaking of another phase of art—interior household art—a young decorator spoke to me not long ago about the hopelessness of trying to make women apply their knowledge of the principles of beauty to their own homes. The average woman, said this young apostle of decorative art, regards painting and sculpture and music as she does the icing on a cake—palatable, but not necessary. The arts, she argues, are pretty stuff to sprinkle over the top of daily living, but as one of the valuable ingredients of a fine existence—oh, no!

It is the rare person who follows the plan of putting to practical use the beautiful effects she publicly admires. As an awful example of what I mean, I called the other day for the first time upon a woman in this town and was ushered into the drawing room to await her appearance. I gasped at the sight of it. Some ancestor must have inherited Joseph's coat of many colors, and out of its remnants she evidently had the furniture upholstered. Three chairs were of flowered red satin, three of weather becomes warmer, for that is one of the staples that cannot be driven out. Besides, it lends itself admirably to the plaited effects that have newly arrived. It is singular to have an era of plaits and no plaits at the same time. The truth is that many women vow they will not resume the plaited skirt, but hold to the scant, straight form. Yet there is a deep current of preference for it stirring at Paris, and leading artists are introducing some suggestion of the plait into nearly all of their choice creations. For spring tailor made mohair of a soft and pliable texture is going to be very much used. The picture shows a chic model of this material in dull red coloring. NEW MODEL IN ECRU NET.

Place Vendome, is the sleeves made all in one piece, with no extensions whatever. It is as though the entire thing had been molded together. No doubt the styles for the coming summer will adopt ideas seen in this blouse. We have arrived at a period when cuts and finishes are at their crescendo of plainness. Nothing further is possible, because effects could not possibly be any more rigid or simple.

Modish simplicity and beauty are combined in the blouse illustrated, which is of ecru net in a new weave not unlike marquisette. The sleeves are set into the fashionable long armholes and the deep cuffs and square neck empiement decorated with tiny silk tassels.

FOR SHEET MUSIC.

Here is a Suggestion That Saves Time and Patience.

Any one who has a collection of music knows how hard it is to keep it assorted and in good condition when it is in every day use. Here is a suggestion which others may like to enjoy: Classify the music and then on the back of each group insert with a bodkin three pieces of fine linen tape through three holes pierced with a sewing machine stiletto.

They should be tied very loosely to allow each piece of music to stand flat against the piano rack. If the sheets are so old that they are badly worn it is well to run the tape up and down along the back in and out through a half dozen holes. This will act as a stay. In that case the tape, being in but one strip, can be secured by tying Confined to His Home for Weeks.

"Heavy work, severe straining and evil habits in youth brought on Varicose Veins. When I worked hard the aching would become severe and I was often laid up for a week at a time. My family physician told me an operation was my only hope—but I dreaded it. I tried several specialists, but soon found out all they wanted was my money. I commenced to look upon all doctors as little better than rogues. One day my boss asked me why I was off work so much and I told him my condition. He advised me to consult Drs. Kennedy & Kennedy, as he had taken treatment from them himself and knew they were square and skillful. I wrote them and got THE NEW METHOD TREATMENT. My progress was somewhat slow and during the first month's treatment I was somewhat discouraged. However, I continued treatment for three months longer and was rewarded with a complete cure. I could only earn $12 a week in a machine shop before treatment, now I am earning $21 and never loose a day. I wish all sufferers knew of your valuable treatment."

FINE COLONY HOUSE.

It Has Given Good Results In Sheltering College Mens.

This shed roof colony house, designed by the Massachusetts Agricultural college, has its wall made of commercial roofing without boards. It is boarded up eighteen inches around the bottom to give stability to the frame and also to form a scratching base so that the paper will not be worn through near the floor.

In building this house the frame was put together, then boarded up eighteen inches around the bottom and seven-eighths inch strips nailed on the outside of the studding from the boarding at the bottom to the top in order to bring the studding out even with the boards. Two inch mesh wire was then stretched over the studs, and over the wire was nailed the commercial roofing. The wire was used to give stiffness to the roofing.

The frame for the base or floor is made of 2 by 4's. These are fastened to the runners by lag screws. Inch mesh wire is stretched over the opening in front. A canvas screen is hinged at the top and lowered in very stormy weather or on extremely cold nights.

This building was used during the winter for a pen of Silver Pencilled Wyandottes. There were no frozen combs, and the egg production was good. They were placed in this house about the 1st of February.

WHEREIN THEY BEAT US.

European farmers think of nothing so much as they do of feeding the soil. Only two methods of restoring fertility to the soil are known to man, and these methods they practice censelessly. One is to grow on it and plow into it the legumi-nous plants—clover, alfalfa, rye, vetch. The other is to feed it fertilizers—a combination of the expensive minerals known to farmers as "commercials" (nitrate of soda or other nitrogenous salts), and, best of all things, barnyard muck.

FIGHT THE SAN JOSE SCALE.

Lime-Sulphur Spraying Recommended to Kill the Insect.

From November to April is the season for spraying to control the San Jose scale and at the same time put a stop to a pest attacking the foliage of apple trees, the leaf blister mite. The best time is at the close of winter, just as the buds are beginning to swell.

The insect is rather hard to detect until it becomes so abundant that attention is called to its work by the dying of twigs or branches or of the whole tree. It is exceedingly small,
about half as big as the head of a pin,
and is covered with a flat, round, dark or grayish scale in the center of which is usually to be discerned a small raised spot surrounded by a shallow depression. As it becomes more numerous the twig or branch takes on a scuffy, ashy appearance. Affected trees or shrubs will be likely to die unless proper treatment is given.

The method of control is a thorough

MARIE ANTOINETTE'S TOMB.

It Is Located In "the Saddest Spot In Paris."

A contributor to the Manchester
Guardian has been visiting the Chapelle Expiatoire, in the Rue des Ma-thurins, which he describes as "the saddest spot in Paris." He had got it into his head that the remains of Louis Seize and Marie Antoinette had entirely disappeared, but he was undeceived:

"This little chapel was built, after the restoration, on the site of the old burial ground of the Madeleine as an act of expiation for the horrors of the revolution and especially for the murder of the king and queen. In that graveyard it was that they were hastily buried in open coffins filled with quicklime. But loving eyes and hands watched and marked the spot, and the day came when the poor remains were brought to light. Even quicklime is not all powerful, and there remained the skulls, a bone or two and—pathetic detail—the elastic metal garters which the unhappy 'Autrichienne' was wearing when Sanson's tireless ax fell

ORCHARDS MEAN HOMES.

It is a fact not generally con- ceded that those who have good orchards seldom desire to sell their farms. A good orchard is significant of a good home, and as a rule a good home is not for sale. Why not plant an orchard and make the home more at- tractive?—Farm and Ranch.

The Value of Leaves.

Leaves are nature's own fertilizer, and the wonderful richness of forests and newly cleared land is due to the amount of decayed leaves and vegetable matter in the soil. This is humus, and every farmer ought to know the value of humus in the soil.

They Clean Up Fields.

Your pastures may be poor, the hill- sides may be cut by numerous gullies, and the place may be overrun by wild vines and tough shrubs, but a flock of sheep will make it as clean as though swept by a broom within a couple of years.

HONEY AND WAX.

The excessive rearing of broods at the wrong season or increase in the number of colonies greatly reduces the surplus honey crop by consumption.

Instead of fussing with the bees the beekeeper had better devote his time to getting things in shape for the coming season—putting hives and sections together, for instance—and thus have all things in readiness for the rush in June.

It is a mistaken economy to use little strips of foundation in either the section boxes or the brood frames, for, while the full sheets will cost a little more, yet the compensating advan- tages of the full sheets will more than pay for the added cost in straighter and better combs.

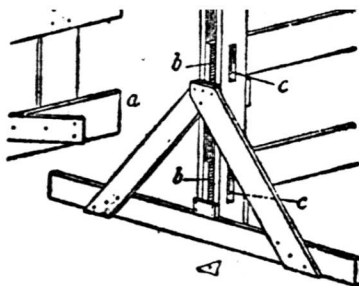

There are three principal brood dis- eases. Two of these—American foul brood and European foul brood—are known to be infectious. From these two diseases there must be differenti- ated the third one, an apparently nonin- fectious disorder, the so called "pickled brood." Larvae dead of this latter dis- ease are practically free from micro- organisms. The exciting cause of this disorder is not yet known.

Bigger Goose Egg Supply.

Unless the eggs are regularly re- moved as soon as the goose has laid about fifteen or eighteen she will prob- ably want to sit. If they are regularly taken away, however, she will lay dou- ble the number, and some may be set under hens.

The frame lettuce will need atten- tion on bright, sunny days. Some fresh air should be admitted every day if the weather will permit.

Musty Wheat.

When wheat is thrashed wet it will always become musty and have a musty smell to it. The only thing that can be done is to dry the wheat thoroughly and run it through a fanning mill, blow- ing out the dust and injured grain. If the wheat has smut in it it should be treated with one pint of 40 per cent formaldehyde to forty gallons of water, using sufficient water to thoroughly moisten the wheat. Cover with burlap sacks for twenty-four hours and then spread and dry. The musty smell of wheat cannot be removed when wheat has been injured by wet weather.—National Stockman and Farmer.

Helping the Farmer.

The plant breeders of the Wisconsin experiment station have increased the average yield of barley six and one-half bushels per acre by producing a new and more prolific variety. The Michi- gan experiment station has developed varieties of wheat that yield more than double the state's average. Corn breed- ers everywhere, in experiment stations and on farms, are increasing yields by breeding more productive varieties. Plant breeding need not be confined to experiment stations, but is a fascinat- ing study for any one.

No Use For the Doctor.

"Why did you send the doctor away without permitting him to do anything for you?"

"Nor was that all. The lime had formed a hard crust upon the open cof- fins and around the bodies, and there embedded lay all the rest."

The visitor descended a flight of steps to a subterranean chapel, dim and chilly, and he continues:

"There before me, in a tiny circular space just beneath a little stained win- dow, stood a white marble altar. En- shrined in that altar, minus the relics at St. Denis, lie all that cruelty and hatred, time and nature, have left of Louis Seize and Marie Antoinette. All was silent. The stray visitors above had gone. The traffic penetrated not to this barren and almost secret cell. I was alone with the injured dead, with the irresolute king who was his own worst enemy, with the frivolous, fascinating, suffering, martyred queen, in whose behalf the 10,000 swords for which Burke cried out in his agony never leaped from their scabbards— alone with the poor remnants of per- haps the most historic woman in his- tory."

This spot is seldom visited. "You wonder," says the writer, "how much the people on the boulevard a few yards away know or care about it all."

Oiling the Swamps.

The oil that is distributed through the swamps of Panama to prevent the crops of mosquitoes which made things so unpleasant is sent on its errand in a novel fashion. At the head of every little watercourse an oil tank is placed that gives its oil drop by drop. When the sudden showers come, as they do, in bucketfuls, the water flows off the higher lands into the swamps, carrying a coating of oil where it is most need- ed.—Christian Science Monitor.

Contentment.

It is said that John D. Rockefeller was once asked by an ambitious young woman, a schoolteacher, for an infallible recipe for contentment. The oil king promptly and forcefully re- plied:

"Never borrow trouble and never lend money."

The Other Way.

"When I put on this diamond ecleet upon your finger, my darling, I am in one way sealing my doom."

"Dear me! You frighten me! How so?"

"I am ringing the Nell of my dearest hopes."—Baltimore American.

Napanee Ladies' Musical Club.

The last regular meeting of the Ladies' Musical Club for the season of 1912-13, was held in the Town Hall on Friday evening, April 25th, a very attentive and appreciative audience being present. A lecture-artist recital arranged by the executive and programme committee proved to be not only very superior as an entertainment but appealed strongly to the intellectual music-lover and student. The Club presented Mrs. W. C. Macnaughton, of Montreal, in a lecture on "Grand Opera," which was illustrated at different intervals with music. This charming speaker in such beautifully chosen language and with such a winning and gracious personality won her audience from the beginning to the close of the evening. The speaker began with the origin of music, tracing it from the wild natural sounds of the savage which consisted of a very few notes, then the formation of the scale and the chorales and folk song which are found in most modern music. The speaker traced the opera, which was the central point, from the year 1600 through the Italian, French and German schools, beginning with Monteverde, Scarlatti, Lully and Gluck, each in their turn striving for the perfection of opera either in recitative or aria or broadening the orchestral side as more instruments came into use. Mozart Meyerbeer and Weber also striving to perfect this form which in the great Richard Wagner reached its culmination. In Italian opera the first illustration was the "Aria" and "Cabaletta," "Infelice," from Verdi's "Ernani," sung in Italian by Mr. Fred Tilley, of Toronto. The second one was a transcription for piano by Leschetizky of the "Sextette" from Verdi's "Lucia di Lammermoor," played by Miss Helen VanLoven. Mrs. Macnaughton in tracing the French opera up to the present mentioned Godard, Gounod, Saint-saens, Massenet and Charpentier each a particular star in grand opera. The illustrations from these were The "Aria," "Romanza," "Quando a te lie ta" from Gounod's "Faust," singing in Italian by Miss Shryver, The Aria, "Berceuse," from Godard's "Jocelyn," sung by Mrs. W. E. Kidd, The Aria, "My heart at thy dear voice," from Saint-saens, "Samson and Delilah" sung by Miss Pearl Nesbitt, and the "Meditation" from Massenet's "Thais" for violin played by Mrs. Cameron Wilson. Mrs. Macnaughton gave also an analysis of the operas "Louise," "Thais" and "Lohengrin" which was very instructive. From the latter opera the speaker requested Miss VanLoven to play a number of motives in illustration of this opera. Then the aria, "Elsa's Dream" from Wagner's Lohengrin, sung by Mrs. VanLoven brought the musical part of the programme to a close. The speaker then in a few well chosen words brought her lecture to a close. A very hearty expression of appreciation from the club is extended to Mrs. Macnaughton for her lecture and also to those who contributed the above numbers each in their own particular excellence of manner, adding so much to the evening's enjoyment. The accompanists were Mrs. B. M. Black, Miss Luella Hall and Miss Helen VanLoven.
